Honor Code Commits Students to Dual Responsibility

by Peg Brown

Chief Justice of Honor Court

Let us look at two words for a minute, the words Honor System. First, Honor. One of the highest qualities in man, comprised of all that which is good, of all that which he looks up to, respects, and desires to see held and upheld. A man will speak for his honor, he will stand for it, he will fight for it; it is one thing which he will not allow to be taken away from him. If we see the word System, for the honor of individual men has been collected and organized to form a single code of honor for a group, a complex which we agree upon that which they regard as honorable, and from which departure means punishment. All that which would tend to destroy the system we see better understood as the intrinsic significance of the words Honor System in the collective life of a group of individuals.

Now let us look more closely at the Honor System as it has been created and established at Connecticut College. Here again, we detect the importance of the personal to us better understand the case impartially, and an study of the girl and the equal importance of the honor of the group as a single whole which everyone, working in connection with the Honor System, to uphold. If you have already noticed, we hope that our study of the Honor System will hold responsibility for each girl. The first of these states that a girl may appeal to the Chief Justice in case of offense and put in request for a reconsideration of the case. The Chief Justice in turn explains the reasons for the decision and sends a note explaining her decision to the Court. The words Honor System in the speaking to the Chief Justice of the Honor Court may decide the case impartially, and our appeal from the Chief Justice is not necessary. Our study of the Honor System will help us understand the significance of the words Honor System in the collective life of a group of individuals.

In Our Collective Strength Lies Our Individual Freedom

by Emily Hodge
President of Student Govt.

"Only the very strong remain free." How often have we seen this, or a similar quotation, printed on a billboard or written in a magazine or book? It is an extremely short sentence but has a wonderfully great and powerful meaning. The creator of this phrase did not mean to imply a capacity for physical endurance or survival; in the use of the word "strong," but rather to express the importance of the possession of a moral and intellectual strength. More explicitly, he suggested that those people shall remain free who have, as their chief attributes, integrity, cooperation, and the ability to accept and respect responsibility.

At Connecticut, we are fortunate in having an extremely democratic form of government. We are all relatively "free." It is true that there exists a very definite inter-dependence among us; but this is true of any community where rules and regulations become necessary for the maintenance of safety, both for the individual and the group. The opportunity is given to all students to deliberate upon these rules and to govern our college with intelligence and sound judgment which has been invested in the student body by the faculty and administration.

The maintenance of this freedom and of the form of government we now possess depends upon the responsibility and interest taken by each student. We must remain "strong." Agility and individuality are not excuses for a lack of responsibility and interest.

But individual strength is not enough. Unity and cooperation are essential. An awareness of our basic ideals and purpose is essential. Together, we must clarify and investigate; make changes necessary and strengthen ideals already established.

Once a month the entire student government congregates in the Auditorium for an Amalgamation meeting. During this time important announcements are made and proposed changes are discussed and voted upon. Because and student is so valuable to our government, her presence at all of these meetings is very important. But participation in every facet of our government is necessary. Attendance at house and class meetings is important in the branches of student government, and the honest expression of ideas and suggestions is so valuable to the "strengths" of our college community. Each student must take an active part if we are to maintain this delicate balance of freedom and self-government.

The Shattered Castle

It is a crime to be a builder of castles in the air, then most of us must plead guilty. But it is a very painful occupation, one that we could not undertake. It is only in very unusual and promising cases where there is a possibility of the castle taking root. In general, the attempt to build castles is a failure, and it is only in a very few cases that the castles are built and the dream is realized.
