Student government members and house juniors assembled at Castle Cabinet, House Juniors Plan Year's Events at The Castle

Two days prior to the arrival of the freshman class, forty house juniors and members of Student Government met in the house nearest to campus and elected officers for the coming year.

An informal "washing out" procedure preceded, with a marshmallow toast Tuesday evening and sleeping bags spread on every available bed of a floor square.

During the first meeting, house juniors and members of Student Government, headed by Bobbie Morse, met together to discuss the various activities being planned by Student Government and other campus organizations.

Some of the major points of discussion were the various concerts to be held, the "Crozer Collegiate" and the "Crozer Collegiate Quiz," for which various topics were chosen with "Crozer" as a tentative subject.

Near the close of the discussion President Shain welcomed the group to Crozer Collegiate and outlined several offers for thought and discussion, and said that he sincerely hoped that the group would not lead to a "loss of the good ideas of smallness" and that unity might be maintained through the incorporation of more intellectual assimilation.

Dean Johnson spoke next and various jobs were assigned to members of Student Government such as ushering and directing in more coming to the Castle, and "...the fact that the United States, with its high ideals, has its number one understudied problem..."

Volunteer Work Characterizes Service League's Operations

The Connecticut College Service League is an organization which works not just through the volunteer groups or the dorm residents, but also through the Service League on campus as a means by which the college can achieve important goals and fulfill the responsibilities of a major university.

The Service League exists to help coordinate the activities of the various volunteer programs, the volunteer programs themselves, and the service leagues as a whole. The Service League is an organization which works to help students fulfill their responsibilities as members of a liberal community, the college, and the community at large.
