Conn Gears Up for This Year's Camelympics

College wants a TNE; not a T and A

Students have been voicing their offense towards last week's TNE. Now notorious for its prurient stereotypical theme, "Sexs and Execs", members of the campus community are asking that regulations are established to prevent another similar student event.

Clearly, events of this type are beneficial to the student body. They provide an opportunity for students to socialize and have a fun time with each other on a "party-night". Increasingly, however, these events have been operating under a tweaked ideology.

The faces of many TNE's, including last week's, is on students dressing up in lewd attire. The practice actually can be a fun practice—in a similar fashion to why Halloween is still fun for college students. It is unfair, however, that the excuse to dress up has been centered on sexual and stereotyped themes because evidently this ideology is offensive to some.

By no means is the author assuming the role as a moral preacher. Students are free to portray and express themselves however they choose. At the same time, however, students need to realize that they are part of a larger community.

College campuses have long been notorious for being referred to as the "Ivory Tower", which implies that they are totally removed from the outside world. Student events like "Sexs and Execs" only strengthen the notion that Connecticut College is a protected community totally untouchable from reality. The fact that the student body can produce certain themes indicates an ignorance or total indifference to open-minded considerations of the viewpoints of others. It seems evident that more and more the driving force for TNE's is to feed students' social appetites regardless of its implications to other members of the community.

Many students praise Conn as a small, close-knit community where virtually everyone knows each other. The tenets at student activities indicate that the campus maintains a certain level of enthusiasm for events at the College. High turnout rates at dances and other events should indeed create a better sense of College pride and community. It appears, though, that TNE's have disproven this notion. "Sexs and Execs" is simply an example that the campus has become more concerned with appealing to a narrow segment of students (and not just freshmen) than fostering a true sense of College pride and community. It appears, though, that TNE's have virtually discredited this notion. Find Time for Something

In the Central Valley of California, a book club called Girl Crushes promotes awareness of homosexuality and appreciation for the diversity of women and non-binary people. One of the members is a young woman, Sylvia, who is writing her first novel. The book club is not only a platform for sharing stories but also a backdrop to the crime of the week on CSI: New York. During a scene, a character named Jocelyn handpicks the best friends, Sylvia, who is also a dog breeder. Jocelyn introduces Sylvia to her career as a dog breeder, and they both appreciate the same characteristics in dogs. Sylvia has a daughter who is homosexual, and they both share a feeling of gothic romance to the whole album. The novel is divided according to the month in which the book club decides to meet. Within each section, one of the members chooses one of the ten lists, and Sylvia always chooses the most intriguing aspect. For example, in the Halloween issue from 2002, for you guitarists, she talks about how the sight of other people eating waffles topped with caramelized banana and waffle topping can make you feel hungry. She also mentions that she has found a woman who is not only a writer but also a talented chef. The novel ends with the characters discussing the significance of waffles in their lives, both in terms of comfort and the sense of community they provide. The book club is not only a place for sharing stories but also a backdrop to the crime of the week on CSI: New York. The members discuss various topics, including the intricacies of waffle-making, the different types of coffee available at the club, and the challenges of finding the perfect waffle. Toothpick, is the quintessence of the style, known by his stage-name, "Toothpick". He is often described as tormented and hopeful and never without a message to preach. That's one of the reasons why Toothpick delivers an album, "Drive Easy," that is driven by passion and a desire to bring something to the forefront of consciousness.

His music is where the true villain is. With a hard edge, one might expect some better effect from the voice of Nina, Howe D explore, or any other voice on the album. Instead, Toothpick delivers an album that some critics call "incomprehensible" on the main scene.

With a voice as sharp and asLeslie Cohen, he amasses elements of rap, hip-hop, folk, jazz, and indie into a cohesive whole. His music is where the true flair for other people's songs resides. It is as if those songs are from a different place in time, a different place in life.

Audience members may feel as though they are watching a production of "Les Misérables" as the story progresses. Scandal plagues the height of the story — but only while they are sober. The alcohol within Toothpick's music is a combination of hope and despair, a mixture of joy and sorrow, and a reminder of the past.

The two main characters who are the focus of the story are well-developed and interesting. By the end of the film, when the characters meet in person, the audience feels as though they have been given a glimpse into the past. It is a life well-lived, and one that will always be remembered.

In conclusion, "Drive Easy" is a unique album that is sure to appeal to fans of Toothpick's style and to those who are new to the music. It is a testament to the power of music and the ability of an artist to convey their message through their art.

Camel Curiosities

“In the family of camels there are only 2 species: The dromedary, characterized by one hump and long legs, lives in the deserts of Arabia and Africa. The bactrian camel has 2 humps and is shorter with a very thick coat. The bactrian lives in northern Asia, China and Afghanistan, in areas called “steppe” that are mostly grasslands.”

Cross Country Teams Play Host To Connecticut College Invitational

The Connecticut College men’s cross country team started another season in its usual fashion. After all the big announcements and the usual tradition on the track and in the gym, there were finally races to be run and won. There were only two ways to start a season than to run your first meet on your home turf.
