Croziers-Williams Dedication Scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 17

Alumnae Day on Campus is to be held Saturday, October 17. A program has been arranged this year for students, faculty, alumnae, guests, and prospective students.

A highlight of the day will be the dedication of the Crozier-Williams Center, at 12:30 p.m., to which everyone is welcome. Presiding will be Mrs. Mary F. Morrison, Chairman of the Physical Education Department, Mrs. Norman C. Main, Graduate Dean, and Mrs. Alfred D. Weyblad, Head of the Physical Education Department. The Reverend Mr. Nicholson, director of admissions and development, will address the audience.

Sarah P. Halter, President of the Alumni Association, Mrs. Mildred E. Kronenburger, scholarship assistant, and Dr. David L. Graham, Dean of Students, will attend the dedication.

Philosophy Dept. Introduces Eminent Additions to Staff

A rare occurrence at any college is the appearance of an eminent scholar to the 1959-60 Connecticut College Philosophy Department. The new staff will include Dr. Lieb, Acting Chairman, Dr. Elsie Karner, and Mr. Stanley Wiesenburger.

Dr. Lieb attended M.I.T. and obtained his Ph.D. in history, and then worked for Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., until 1956. He is on the editorial staff of the Harvard Crimson and has written about which organizations should give each one, and of whether students are asked to donate, and with this money what is the goal of liberal education? This charity is the “all of ours in one asks-it,” so please give our appeal your consideration.

The Reverend Mr. Nicholson, director of admissions and development, will address the audience.

Professor Lieb has published a number of articles on the Russian performances of Verdi’s works. During the fall, Mr. Kronenburger will lecture on the life and music of Verdi, and in the summer, they reside on Connecticut farm.

National Science Foundation Offers Graduate Fellowships

National Science Foundation Graduate Fellowships will be awarded to 109 students planning to undertake graduate study in the sciences.

Applications may be submitted until January 1, 1960. They will be solicited by the National Academy of Sciences, National Research Council, Washington 20, D.C. The fellowships will be awarded to United States citizens who have demonstrated ability and special aptitude in the sciences.

Two manuscripts of his own, one of which will be for publication in the University of Chicago Press, and another, which will be a manuscript for the Princeton Press. And when not teaching or working on literary matters, he enjoys aviation. Mr. Lieb finds time to keep up his interest in air sports, having been an accomplished pilot and a certified flight instructor, “for myself only.”

As for the study of philosophy in college, Mr. Lieb feels that it leads to “reformation of judgment,” which is the goal of liberal education. Philosophical studies should also give “sensibility and discretion: there is no need to repeat the faults of the past, economic, indiscipline and efficiency of the modern society.”

Professor Lieb has published a number of articles on the Russian performances of Verdi’s works. During the fall, Mr. Kronenburger will lecture on the life and music of Verdi, and in the summer, they reside on Connecticut farm.

Madmoiselle Contest Offers Prize for Literary Endeavor

Every year Mademoiselle offers three cash prizes to the best articles written by students, faculty, and alumnae. An award of $1,000 may be given to each of these winners. The prizes are open to anyone who has written an article for Mademoiselle magazine.

Punitive Coward has written an article on philosophy or philosophy-related subjects, which will appear in a college magazine. This article is required to be in cooperation with the science department.

An award of $1,000 may be given to each of these winners. The prizes are open to anyone who has written an article for Mademoiselle magazine. The prizes will be awarded to the author of the best article, which is the goal of liberal education.
Girl from Athens Displays Interest In U. S. Education

It is very difficult for the typical American student to imagine a modern Greece. Greece for most people means "wine-dark seas," sacred groves, Delphic oracles, and certainly not a country with a modern economy. But one does tend to assume that Greece does exist, and it calls itself a "free country," and that it is a democracy.

The Greek island of Corfu is a telling example. On this island, situated in the Ionian Sea, is a land of sacred groves, Delphic oracles, and certainly not a country with a modern economy. But one does tend to assume that Greece does exist, and it calls itself a "free country," and that it is a democracy.

Corfu is full of fugitives, some escaping from the island. But it is also a source of inspiration for those who wish to emigrate, and has hopes of reforming the Greek educational system. Perhaps the island's population is not as large as that of the United States, but it is certainly as well worth the knowing. The Greek educational system is one of the best on any college campus. Your faculty (as you have been prided on being) is well known for its dedication to the pursuit of knowledge. Your students (as you have been prided on being) are comparatively young.

This past week has seen the start of a new idea. Not yet is it an idea on a larger scale, but it is a step in the right direction. It is a step that will be taken by a group of students who have made "at home" appointments with groups of faculty members who have invited them to dinner, for example, without being pushed. And fortunately for our side, there have been groups of faculty and students who have made "at home" appointments with groups of students. In short, the situation hasn't been hopeless.

The Advantage

This idea seems to be the inspiration necessary to get more students involved in the school. It is no longer necessary to extend an invitation to faculty members; they will do it for you if you want them to do it for you. And what's more, the idea has been successful. On a smaller scale, it has been successful on a larger scale. It is still an idea on a larger scale, but it is a step in the right direction. It is a step that will be taken by a group of students who have made "at home" appointments with groups of faculty and students who have invited them to dinner, for example, without being pushed. And fortunately for our side, there have been groups of faculty and students who have made "at home" appointments with groups of students. In short, the situation hasn't been hopeless.

Volunteer workers go to their dorms every day in cities and towns everywhere, people don't hesitate to offer help to someone close to them needed but whose help can never be forced. Giving blood is not a sacrifice, it is a gift, it is a way of making a difference in the life of another person. The advantage is that it is a way of giving of themselves for others.

It has been announced that students may obtain tickets to the series for $3.00, as long as the tickets are obtained in advance. This price will also give purchasing members to the Museum, and attend the performances. It is a deduction of one third for busy man hours) to make an average available. to my woman...
English translation of this Russian score because the story is probably changed to a tale of rich versus poor.

Mr. Warren was asked his opinion of the translations of operas from their original language into the language of the performance doing a particular rendition. He said, that translations of this sort detract from the score. The only way to retain the complete impression which a composer wished to convey is to present the opera in the language in which it was written.

Mr. Warren's attitude toward American modern music was also voiced in the brief interviews which he granted after his performance. This music, he says, is in a period of transition, as are all American arts. Most people are on the wrong track in their attempts to find a new musical form. From this period of transition will evolve some of the greatest culture, but we are afraid that we cannot do better than the older form. We must try if we are to succeed. It is true that few people are writing good music at the time, just as few people are writing good metered prose. Mr. Warren gave as an example of American modern music was some of D. H. Lawrence's "Lament of Soul" which when set to music was sung by the baritones. If those who are now striving to create new music will stick to it long enough, Mr. Warren believes, wonderful art forms will appear.

Miss Karner has written several articles and collaborated on two anthologies and is now writing a book entitled "The Impact of Philosophical Theory on Political Ideology." Her other interests range from literature, modern theory, and cultural anthropology to swimming. She came to Connecticut for several reasons, one of which was a desire to live in the East Coast countryside as a change from the hustle and bustle of New York City. When questioned about contrasts between American and European educational systems, Miss Karner made the oft-heard remark that European students study more than we do, but she added that she felt this was a result of fewer temptations to lure the European student from his work.

The third member of the new department is Stanley Weissman, Instructor in Logic and a seminar candidate for the doctoral degree there. His dissertation for this degree is in a new field, that of "The Logical Analysis of Translation Between Languages."

One of the features of this study is the analysis of the structure of mathematical systems by which it can be represented.

Mr. Weissman served in the Army, has taught at the Dwight School and Queens College in New York City, and worked in New York City, and constructed vocational tests for the New York City Personnel Bureau. At present his chief outside interest is furnishing apartments (in particular, his own); he also enjoys music and discussions. He finds his seminar work very challenging, especially working with only three students. He has been, he says, very favorably impressed by the high caliber of the CC students.

on the Philosophy of Science. Mr. Weissman is well suited to both courses, since it was the study of mathematics and physics at Brooklyn College which led him to philosophy. He realized that what really interested him about these subjects were the implications that could be drawn rather than the actual techniques—hence, philosophy.

Mr. Weissman continued his studies in philosophy at Columbia to obtain his M.A. and is now a candidate for the doctorate degree there. His dissertation for this degree is in a new field, that of "The Logical Analysis of Translation Between Languages."
