Conn springs a leak

Convictions spur

Conn students to Niantic

By LINDA BATTER

Although apathy is an accepted social attitude at Connecticut College, there is a group of fifteen students who are looking forward to a year of involvement as volunteers at the Connecticut Correctional Institute in Niantic, Connecticut.

Twenty miles from our hollowed walls of ivory-towered liberalism is a state prison housing women convicts. They spend their days in much the same way one would expect: they attend classes with the eventual goal of receiving a high school diploma (that is, those that presently do not have one), work in the arts and crafts area, use the library, and exercise in the gymnasium. Outwardly this does not appear to be such a gloomy life. In fact, though, all of these women are biding time until their prison release.

Andy Shechter, a Junior coed, is organizing a group of Connecticut College students to participate in volunteer work on weekday evenings at the Conn. Correctional Institute. Among these dedicated individuals are Laura deCosta, Roberta Weil, and John Thompson.

Their goal in volunteering to work is to establish mutually rewarding friendships with the inmates. Most of the women with whom the Conn. College students work are in their early to mid-twenties. The majority are in prison as a result of drug related charges.

Miss Shechter said that she had expected the women to resent the students, but they did not; she expected them to hate prison, but they do not — mostly, they live knowing that they will be getting out soon.

Conditions at the prison are above par. The women live in cottages which house about thirty to forty inmates; each woman has her own personal room. Some of the inmates are permitted to be in a work-release program which is unfortunately limited by insufficient funds. The women are allowed to go home on furlough occasionally.

Despite these privileges, the Connecticut Correctional Institute is still very much a prison. Perhaps the efforts of the Conn. College students will be a comfort to the inmates in alleviating the painfulness of being a prisoner.

Nixon 'Now' on campus

By DAVID BUSHY

More than 30 students have volunteered in the past two weeks to work in the Youth for the Re-election of the President.

The group, formed in late September by Linda Bennett '75 and David Bushy '74-Exchange is working in conjunction with the Connecticut Youth for the Re-election organization, which is headed by Chuck McLean, Tufts '71.

A campus-wide poll presently being conducted by the volunteers has already turned up several hundred Nixon supporters on campus. The group expects the number of volunteers to double in the next two weeks and foresees a high percentage of Connecticut students eventually voting for the president.

"Issue Sessions," open to all students will be held this month, centering upon the President's program and plans for the future.

McLean and the local student leaders will conduct the evening events, which will be held in a lecture hall. Also planned are information booths around campus, as well as an "Issue Phone," which students may call if they have questions.

The student leaders of the Re-election group see McGovern support on campus as being highly emotional, with many persons backing the Democratic candidate because of peer pressure or due to the fact that he is the so-called "candidate of youth."

The Nixon group hopes to inform students of the differences between the positions of both candidates and of their respective programs. The Nixon welfare program will be compared directly in the issue sessions with the McGovern proposal, as will the defense programs, foreign policy, and tax reform, to name a few.

Candidate critique: Roger Hilsman

By JIM PERSKIE

Roger Hilsman is the Democratic candidate for Congress in Connecticut's Second Congressional district. He is also the bumper-sticker under, above, or besides that of George McGovern's on many of Connecticut's cars.

Hilsman is a folk-hero to some and a very real candidate to whom much hard work and many long hours must be volunteered by others.

The volunteer forces of Roger Hilsman have been joined with the volunteer forces of McGovern throughout much of Eastern Connecticut. This coalition has provided both candidates with an extensive and extremely hard working organization.

The platform of Mr. McGovern and the platform of Mr. Hilsman are contiguous to the extent that cooperation between Hilsman and McGovern forces goes beyond party loyalty.

High school students participate in C-Day

By LISA WEISKOP

On October 9, 1972, if one happens to see a group of starry-eyed young people gazing at the renowned edifices of this collegiate institution, one will realize that they form a part of the 150 high school students participating in College Day ceremonies at Connecticut College.

These students live within a three hour radius of Conn., in such areas as Boston, Litchfield County, Hartford, New Haven, Fairfield County, Westchester County, Bergen County, Wooster, Springfield, Providence, and New London.

They will travel here in chartered buses, and after arriving will have the opportunity to visit classes, attend lecture-demonstrations, lunch in the dormitories with students, meet with the Admissions staff, and tour the campus.

The students will go only to the events that interest them, since the program is flexible and its purpose is to enable them to enrich their own views of college life.

The day will commence with registration at Crozier-Williams between 10:00 and 10:30 a.m. Between 10:30 and 1:00 the students can attend classes and/or lecture-demonstrations held by specific members of the faculty.

These will include the following presentations: Miss Omwake will take interested students on a tour through the children's school. Miss Macklin and department majors will take a group of high school and anthropology students on a dig. Mr. Fell and Mr. Hunter will deliver a lecture on the science of Marine Biology. Demonstrations with ceramics, the electron microscope, and the computers will be given by Pete Leibert, Professor Prokesch, and Wayne Ingersall respectively.

In the realm of the fine arts a poetry reading, and lectures on music, theater, and the dance will be given by Professor Meredith and Reverend Shepherd, Professor Dale, Professor Crabtree, and Laurie Lindquist.

These events will be crowned on a social note with a Rock concert at noon in Crozier-Williams gym and informal meetings with members of the Admissions staff. Between 2:30 and 3:00 the buses will depart from Cro for their specific destinations.

Mrs. Bredeson, associate director of admissions, emphasizes the importance of cooperation and participation from Conn students themselves in order to have Campus Day be a successful venture.

If any students on campus know someone who is interested in applying to Conn., please inform them of this event.

Also, students are needed to give tours, and to take people to lunch and to classes.

If you would like to help please contact Paula Zuraw at Windham-Box 1877.

Your interest and participation would be greatly appreciated.

Cro Bar?

The biggest thing that has hit Connecticut College since it first decided to drop the last two words of its name has been the appointment of Bart Gullong as Coordinator of Crozier-Williams.

In less than one month's time he and his diligent workers are well on their way to accomplishing what every other organization has failed to do — establish an effective and responsive student center at Conn.

Bart has already satisfied the more frivolous aspect of each student by converting the first floor lounge into a Student Recreation Room, fully equipped with pool and ping pong tables.

Now he and his committee are seeking to incorporate the more sophisticated element as well, through the establishment of a "pub" in Cro's Main Lounge.

The tavern would give atmosphere to a rarely-used room and furnish both students and faculty with the opportunity to exchange more than a passing greeting as they gulp down their canned sodas.... As is presently the case.

Since the plans are still in the drawing-board stage, we will take this opportunity to suggest to the committee a few considerations, which we hope will aid them in the final execution of this bar.

Although the alumni really have very little voice in this matter (other than perhaps pressuring the administration), it would prove beneficial in the long run to make them aware of this proposal. Give them the "specs" on it: its location, organization, limitations, advantages... This step would mitigate the probability of contributors withdrawing their endowments after hearing distorted stories about the advent of alcoholism and "topless" barmaids at Conn College. In fact, many alumni may be so pleased that they were informed that they may be induced to give both vocal and monetary support to this operation.

The students should also be made aware of the plans and their progress and should be encouraged to take part in the establishment of this bar. Employment cases should be publicized so that everyone has equal opportunity to apply for a position.

As evidenced by the almost unanimous response to the petitions that have been circulating around

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor:

Through some unfortunate misunderstanding, the report on the Twelve College Exchange Program was misleading if not entirely erroneous in its details. The so-called statistics should have been sought from Mr. Rhyne, the Registrar, who is the official responsible for such data. Furthermore, the data from last year can be of no significance for students who wish to apply for the year 1973-1974. My postponement (not refusal) of an interview was that I had no information to give out at the time of the request, as the Program Coordinator at Wheaton, Philip Driscoll, had not yet scheduled the meeting to establish the ground rules for the coming year.

I am sorry that this postponement of the interview was misconstrued as a refusal to divulge what the Twelve College plans are. That meeting has now been scheduled for October 11, 1972, in Boston. Upon my return from that meeting I will, as I have done each year in the past, then call a meeting of the Sophomore Class to let them know the procedures for application that will have been agreed upon at that meeting. As I thought I had clearly indicated, I shall be glad at that time to grant an interview.

It is true that I have been disappointed each year that more of our students who applied have not been able to participate in the Exchange. I have consistently warned all students who have applied not to get so set on acceptance at a particular school that heartbreak results if acceptance is not granted. I expect to continue to repeat that warning in the future — a warning, I may say, I also give to all students who wish to spend a year at other institutions in the United States that are not in the Twelve College Exchange.

Sincerely yours,

ALICE JOHNSON
Associate Dean of the College

To the Editor:

I would like to apologize for the misunderstandings created by the twelve college exchange article.

(1) The sequence of the article was disrupted while at the printers.

(2) Dean Johnson herself did not refuse to disclose the information. However, there was a communications problem, and I was not informed that the statistics I desired were available at the Registrar's office, or that more explicit information pertaining to the status of the exchange for 73-74 will be released by Dean Johnson as soon as they are determined by the 12CE committee.

Hollis Baker

To the Editor:

I would like to make the following comments concerning "The Mucking of the President" by dk.

The assertion that the candidates from the Class of 1975 achieved office with "a majority of the class either not voting or casting ballots," is totally inaccurate. More than two-thirds of the class voted; the election would have been declared invalid had it been otherwise.

The assertion that "it is past time to drop the 'No Campaigning Rule,'" is rather Donny-come-lately. Three weeks ago Student Assembly passed an amendment to the By-laws of Student Government Article III, Section D, paragraph 4, allowing verbal campaigning on this campus. This amendment was in effect during the Junior Class elections this fall.

For the sake of Pundit and its credibility, I suggest that Donald Kane go back to the fundamentals of good journalism, and have accurate information in his articles; or accounts of other people's supposed "blunderings" will blow up in his face.

Josie Curran,
Vice-president of Student Government

EDITOR'S NOTE:

More than two-thirds of the Class of 1975 voted last spring, but a majority of the class either did not vote or voted for no one, casting blank ballots which counted toward the required two-third participation rule.

The PUNDIT did not endorse a mild verbal campaigning law, but rather one allowing "almost unlimited electioneering."

Class of 1976 Presidential Candidate's Credendas

Brian Feigenbaum

I feel the position of Freshman Class President is a learning position. I am prepared to learn about the Freshman and represent the Freshman Class.

Robert Hoffman

I was forewarned by some wise sages that in order to be elected class president I would have to give an anti-intellectual speech. I disagreed with my Tiresian friends for I felt that the man with the most bazaar and agrarian speech is not necessarily the victor, however, in order to satisfy my advisors and hopefully secure more votes from the populace I will say the following: I would like to see an improvement of the social life on this campus, such as, rock and jazz concerts and a liquor license for Crozier - Williams. I almost suggested a chicken in every pot but I've had chicken on more than twenty different occasions in the last month, which reminds me that something must be done with the present food situation in this College. And now for intellectuality —

It has been said that the purpose of a political party is to work toward a set of common goals and objectives. Today I declare myself a political party. Naturally I have my own goals and objectives, but these are unimportant, what is important however are the goals and objectives of each member of my political party, thus to say the freshman class. I aim to make these goals and objectives a reality wherever possible.

TO THE EDITOR:
I had originally planned for this to be a short, not-intended-to-be-printed letter complimenting Pundit on its well-planned and well-executed 9-28 issue. However, I rapidly changed that intention upon the reading of Don Kane's editorial column, "Edith's Debunking."

Granted, Pundit is hardly devoid of critical articles (note Jay Levin's on the voting fiasco and Frann Axelrad's on security). Most of it is well done, however, and exhibits nowhere near the crudity of Kane's article.

As both a "Polack" and a Catholic, I could easily take personal insult from the piece on those counts, but I am not so sensitive as that. I do object, though to the vulgarity Don used to express his opinion on abortion.

There is no way by which I can make promises or pick apart present college politics, for I, as well as every member of the freshman class have not yet been totally indoctrinated into the system, thus, there are many policies and formalities which we do not understand or for that matter are oblivious to. I plan to make it my business that everyone understands and is informed of their position and rights in this campus community. Without a knowledge of the thesis we can not create an antithesis. As president I hope to be a puppet, not a puppet of the administration or existing student faculty committees but a puppet of the student body.

David Palten

My name is David Palten, and I am seeking the office of President of the Class of 1976.

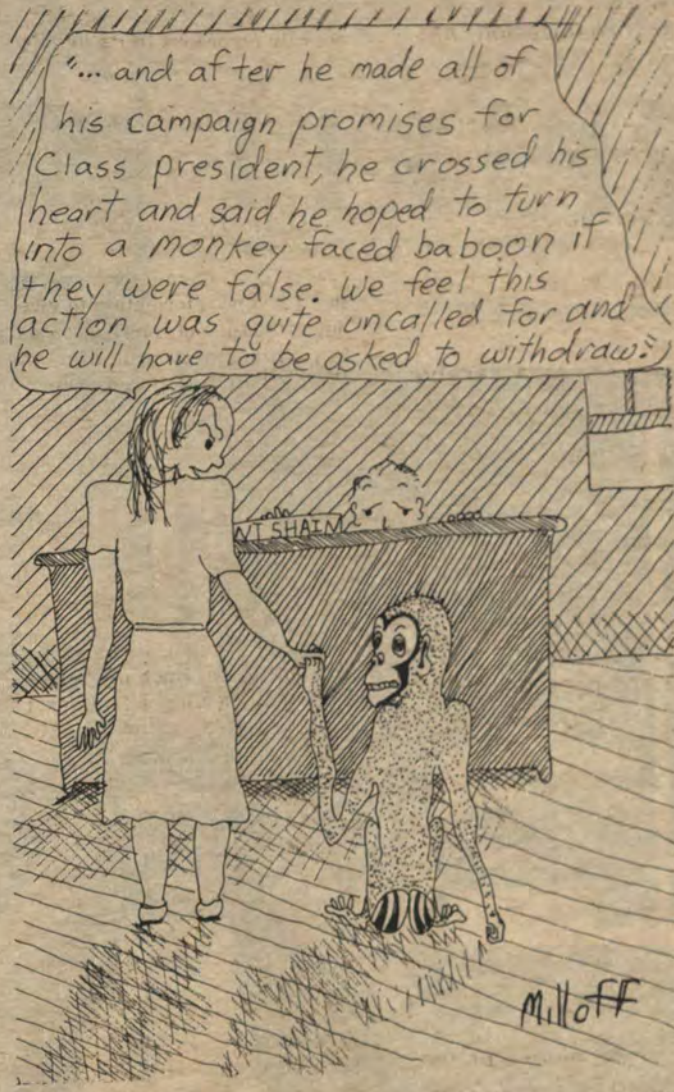

I would like, in my brief platform, to stress the following: 1) Doing away with requirements, 2) examining the calendar for the academic year, 3) re-evaluate the honor system and code.

I would also like to emphasize my belief in the importance of class unity. Thank you for your support.

Kevin "Durwood" Smith

It is usual in a campaign spot such as this to introduce oneself and give one's qualifications.

It is my view that the greatest and most significant qualification that a candidate and an officer can have is a sense of humor. And I believe that I meet that particular standard.

Now, that is not to say that I view this election and this office of president as a joke. That is definitely not the case.

But amidst the confrontation on parking policy, academic reform, and social policies, a reasonable sense of humor can give an officer the necessary sense of perspective that is so vital for superior leadership.

So I ask for your support in this presidential election. Many of you I haven't had a chance to meet, but I wish all of you the best of luck in our first year at Connecticut College.

How to obtain absentee ballots

Connecticut's Second Congressional District comprises about one-half the geography of the state and has some 180,000 voters. There are also approximately 80,000 persons over the age of eighteen, fully qualified to vote, who have not registered to do so.

This might seem phenomenal: that the voting population of Eastern Connecticut could conceivably be increased by about 45 per cent; yet this is not peculiar to this particular district or state. The fact is that people of all age groups are not exercising their most basic and vital right.

Absentee ballots can be gotten by writing either your hometown

Many paths lead to perimeter road

By CARIN GORDON

The campus of Connecticut College will be greatly altered in the near future. Plans are being formulated to construct a perimeter road, a multi-million dollar library, a student union, a field house, and a pedestrian mall. (Although many of these additions are merely in the first stages of planning.)

existing roads behind the south dorms, around Cummings Art Center, and to Fanning Hall. From there the road heads toward Mohegan Avenue behind Hale Laboratory. It continues running parallel to Mohegan Avenue, turning north at the faculty housing.

The road then loops the complex, runs behind the tennis courts, under the infirmary to the Williams Street entrance.

between Larrabee House and Winthrop Hall. Swinging westward the road passes Wright House, behind Lazarus HHouse and the infirmary to the Williams Street gate.

SURVIVAL offered a third alternative to the perimeter road discussion. It was suggested that instead of building more roads and parking areas, that the number of cars on campus be drastically reduced. This could playing field. The entrance would be changed to Williams Street, and there would no longer be parking elsewhere on campus.

All these plans were invented with the hope of closing off the roads running in front of the library and Crozier-Williams to all traffic, except emergency and service vehicles. Eventually even these roads would be replaced by a landscaped pedestrian mall. There are, however, many library from being used as an access road for traffic between Williams Street and Mohegan Avenue.

None of the plans have satisfied the inevitable parking problem this campus will witness. It has been suggested that a parking garage be built behind the faculty housing. The garage need not be a part of the college, but rather a distinct commercial entity.

Finally the question arises in

PILOT PLAN for 'CENTRAL AREA' and 'PEDESTRIAN MALL'
CONNECTICUT COLLEGE
NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT

SCALE 1" = 100'

The first of these projects to begin will be the perimeter road. The first link in what will eventually be a road encircling the entire campus is the construction of a road, connecting the driveway behind Lazarus House with the parking lot behind the complex.

The road will cost, according to President Shain, "considerably less than the $300,000 proposed last year for a perimeter road, hopefully less than $20,000" and realistically about $30,000.

However, lighting has not been included in this price, nor has sidewalks.

Once the drive is begun it will take only 60 days to build.

Permission has already been granted from the Trustees to build this link. The plan will be presented to the College Development Committee, and eventually to the college in an open meeting.

This plan was finalized in a study conducted at the end of last year by a combined group of students, faculty, and administrators, who met with the architects of the new library.

Prior to this study committee, many perimeter road proposals had been suggested by various concerned groups on campus.

An early plan changes the main entrance of the campus from Mohegan Avenue to the Williams Street gate. Plan A continues on Parking lots would be constructed north of Lazarus House, near Winthrop Hall, and at the north end of the complex.

A second proposal also uses the Williams Street entrance, follows a similar route as plan A, behind the south dorms, around Cummings Art Center to Fanning Hall. At Fanning the drive continues past the Post Office, be accomplished by a more strict enforcement of the parking regulations, a higher parking registration fee, and the establishment of a bus shuttle service between the campus and town.

A compromise plan proposed by Allen Carrol suggested building a parking lot behind the south dorms on what is now a things still to be considered. With the completion of the Groton Bridge interchange, Williams Street will be cut off and become a dead end. This would make it difficult to use Williams Street as the main entrance. Yet, one would also like to prevent the drive running in front of the many students' minds whether a perimeter road is really necessary or could the money be spent elsewhere.

As President Shain affirmed, "We do what we can afford to do. It is necessary to have a balanced program among all the campus' needs."

slashed lines indicate perimeter link

Roger Hilsman will be speaking on Viet Nam on Thursday, Oct. 5 at 7:00 p.m. at Oliva Hall.

Both candidates' desires for an immediate end to the Vietnam War and for far-reaching social reforms are quite attractive to the young and liberal, a designation that could well describe a large part of the McGovern-Hilsman organization.

Hilsman's qualifications for office are numerous. He has resided in the Second Congressional District for eight years. Hilsman's education and university experience is extensive to the point that, early in the campaign, incumbent Robert Steele attempted to play up Hilsman as an egg-head lost in the academic world, not able to be useful outside the world of the university.

This approach of Steele's was quickly abandoned. Hilsman obtained his B.A. at West Point. His studies were eventually continued at Yale, where he received his M.A. and his Ph.D.

From 1953-56 Hilsman was a Research Associate at Princeton.

During the year of 1957, he was an Adjunct Professor at George Washington University; 1958-61 Hilsman was an Adjunct Professor at the School of Advanced International Studies, John Hopkins University.

After leaving the State Department in 1964, he became a Professor of Government at Columbia University.

Hilsman also has an impressive list of jobs and appointments in and around the Capitol: Chief, Foreign Affairs Division, Congressional Research Service from 1956-58; Director of Intelligence and Research, Dept. of State; and Assistant Secretary of State for Far-Eastern Affairs, 1963-64.

Hilsman, presently a Colonel in the U.S. Army Reserve, has a war record that has led some into insisting that he was a war criminal and that his record as a commando in World War II and during the Korean War should be inspected further. Nevertheless, Hilsman is a much decorated veteran.

To complement his list of qualifications, Roger Hilsman has presented plans to improve the situation in this district. Eastern Connecticut has the highest rate of unemployment in the state. At the same time, this district has numerous government installations. Hilsman feels that this district should be paid back for serving the Federal government for so long.

He has suggested that the U.S. Congress enact a jobs-now program that would establish public service jobs for the unemployed.

On the topic of pollution, Hilsman feels that the burden of cleaning up the environment should not be passed on to the worker or even to the separate states; rather he has said, "The federal government must help, and large corporations must be required to absorb their share of the expense of cleaning up our world."

Hilsman has made clear his stand on other issues as well: he is in favor of a national health insurance plan that would provide expert medical care to the sick — of any income level.

He also is insisting on an alternative to the Republican proposed method of financing the schools through the use of a value-added tax. Roger Hilsman feels that the only fair way to finance the schools is through the national income tax.

A major reason for the strong support of Hilsman expressed by the young McGovern people is Hilsman's stand on the Vietnam War. Robert Steele has run his campaign, for the most part, by merely quoting his record in his last term (a tried and true method of campaigning available only to incumbents). Hilsman has been unable to do this and has taken stands on issues of national and international consequence.

Hilsman quit his post in the State Department over dissatisfaction with the war policies of President Johnson. He has stated recently that he favors an immediate end to the bombing.

This position of Hilsman has led many critics to wonder how a Colonel in the Army Reserve and a former commando could have such a deep seated anti-war feeling. Hilsman counters that his views on the war in Vietnam were made perfectly clear when he left the State Dept. in 1964.

In any event, Roger Hilsman has created a bit of excitement in this race for Congress. He has come up with both new and some not so new plans for Eastern Connecticut (his proposal that the U.S. base its defense systems on the use of submarines is not an altogether unheard of idea for politicians from this area, home of the Groton submarine base and numerous other shipyards).

He had to be urged into running for office, and when he finally decided to run, he decided to make this a campaign of issues, not a campaign of "charisma" or slogans.

Camels twice reach goal

By PAUL LANTZ

Bouncing back after last week's loss, the soccer Camels defeated the Coast Guard Junior Varsity team 4-1. Excellent ball control, far better conditioning, and a general feeling of confidence — all of which were absent last Friday — led the Camels to victory.

Freshmen Tim Cotes and Dana Sochachi were major contributors in the win, even though they took the field with only two days of practice. With experience should come their full potential as Conn. soccer players.

The victory was spearheaded by what this reporter considers two offensive and two defensive standouts: Dave Kelly, playing with an injured knee raised his total goal performance to four; Rod Taylor who ranks just below

Kelly in goal production provided perhaps the clinching goal against the cadets; and on defense, Jim Lowe made numerous saves and "Namath" passes to midfield; and John Phillips who played an intelligent, well-executed game.

The Camels then made it two in a row last Saturday at Manhattenville where they routed their soccer opponents 7-0.

The defensive star was again goalie Jim Lowe who earned his first shutout of the year. Dave Sochachi came through again scoring two goals in this his second game. Other goals were scored by Roy Taylor, Dario Coletta, James Suarez, and Dave Kelly.

The Camels continue their campaign Friday in a home contest against Eastern Conn. State College.

Sportsmanship flags in dorm football

By GREG YAHIA

Controversy abounds in this year's flag football season.

A hastily put-together schedule has been issued and rules have not been clearly established. The officiating is in a disastrous state, and there appears to be considerable inequity between the teams.

According to chief official Jeff Zimmerman, the schedule is a round-robin tournament involving nine teams. However, a quick glance at the schedule reveals that each team plays only five times.

In a true round-robin tournament, each team plays every other team, or in this case, eight games.

This year the rule prohibiting the defensive line from rushing until the count of three has been dropped, allowing an immediate rush upon the offensive.

Many of the players fear that this rule is going to be the cause of bodily injury, as body contact will be dramatically intensified.

The flag-football style of the sport supercedes the old touch football type played at Conn last year. Students who have already played report that the defense has been tackling the ball carrier and then removing the flag.

The single official appears to be overwhelmed at the games.

One player muttered to this reporter, "if anyone tries pulling any... with me..."

Some dorms have enough players for two or three teams, but will be allowed to field only one. The imbalance is reflected by the 72-0 whalloping Larabee gave Morisson.

This reporter feels that large revisions are needed. It is not too late to redraw the schedule. One idea is to divide the campus North and South, intersperse the players, and have a Super Bowl at the close of the season between the leader of each respective division.

These specifics notwithstanding, SOMETHING MUST BE DONE!

Net Notes

The women's tennis team was victorious in their first contest of the season. The match was played last Thursday at Central Connecticut College in New Britain.

Playing doubles were Karen Awad and Sarah Burchenal who won their match 6-3, 6-4, and Cathy Backus and Les Revilock who won 6-1, 6-1.

The situation became a little tense when two of our singles players lost their matches, making the overall score 2-2 with one more match to be played. (Despite a noble effort Bambi Flickinger and Nancy Collins lost 6-4, 6-4 and 6-4, 7-5 respectively.)

But Kim Llewellyn came through in the clutch, winning her singles match 4-6, 7-6, 7-6 (tie-breakers) and giving the victory to Conn.

The Coast Guard Academy tennis squad destroyed Conn's men in their September 26 match.

The Cadet team swept every single set, limiting Conn. to no more than three games per set.

Bart Gullong: a stroke of genius

By DONALD KANE

The bustling blue flash causing all the stir at Crozier Williams this year is its Co-ordinator, Bart Gullong.

A big, happy, teddy-bear of a man, Gullong has assumed the responsibilities of Co-ordinator in addition to his coaching chores with crew. Although the positions are not complimentary, he has attacked both with innovation and zeal belying his considerable talent and energy.

One of the more exciting of these innovations is the possibility of establishing a pub in the student lounge. Mr. Gullong reports that even now "the drinking policy is under discussion and the legalities are under investigation, especially in light of the recent state action legalizing the sale of alcohol to those eighteen and older. The final decision rests with the soon to be named Crozier Williams committee, the students, and, ultimately, the Board of Trustees.

The Cro Committee will consist of five students and five members of the faculty and will establish policies for the building which Gullong will carry out in consultation with Dean Watson.

Mustachioed Gullong hopes that his efforts will provide a "service to the college community in building a consistency of activity in Crozier." Other duties of the Co-ordinator include the scheduling of events, including mixers, and making physical improvements. Arrangements are currently under way to install a cork board wall in the lobby and a marquee which will handle all student announcements, and to apply the profits of the downstairs pool table to the purchase of one for the upper level.

Gullong is looking for a more socially oriented campus, preferring to see students from other schools drawn here. He hopes that Crozier will be the "link between the students and the community." But at the present time, it seems that Bart Gullong himself is the strongest link.

Coach Gullong began his career at Simsbury High School as a guidance counselor and crew coach while still working for his masters in counseling from Central Connecticut. "Those days were great," exclaims Gullong with a smile.

Those were also busy days. Up in the morning at 6 a.m. to begin his duties as compassionate mentor, it wasn't until 2:30 in the afternoon that the drastic Jeckell and Hyde transformation overcame him and he became Bart Gullong, Crew Coach. After sunset there was the mad rush to his classes which didn't end until 11:30 in the evening.

It was Gullong's penchant for innovation that also lost him his first job. The two coxswains of the crew the Coach picked were female, and the Administration pointed to the state athletic rules which disallow female participation in male athletics. "Yes," Bart pointed back, "but the state does not recognize rowing as a sport."

Not content with this explanation, the Administration renounced the team. The students immediately went to work and made over 1400 grinders in one day to raise the $900 necessary to keep the crew in business. Fred Emerson, who is presently the crew benefactor at Connecticut College, came to the rescue in loaning Gullong's team the equipment they needed, and the town of Salisbury found itself proudly sponsoring a crew team.

By this point the UPI had picked up on the story, and Bart Gullong and his self fashioned, independent team were national news. Even more thrilling were the two state title out of a possible five earned by his tyro crew that year.

Gullong's efforts came "at the time when female lib. was just getting rowing," and as a result, the state athletic rules have since been altered to allow female participation in male athletic events, but only as crew coxswains.

Bart Gullong may also be leading this year's Conn. crew into uncharted waters. Perhaps attracted by his reputation, a record sixty persons turned out for crew earlier this fall, equally divided between male and female.

Coach Gullong is driving them hard, eleven practices a week at the Yale Boat House at Gales Ferry on Thames, but the team doesn't seem to mind. "They have a competitive attitude this year. With the material we have now, we wouldn't lose any of last year's races," beams the master of the fleet.

Highlights of the upcoming year include projected entries in the Williams and Charles Regattas, and the construction of a boathouse on college-owned property by the Thames—to be built by the crew itself!

Integration of his counseling and coaching training has proved difficult for Mr. Gullong: "Coaching is too emotion packed a sport to use the counselor's approach, although perhaps I do from time to time."

I don't like being thought of as a professional, explains Gullong. "Being professional means being distant. For example, some people say 'You don't look like the Co-ordinator of Crozier Williams.' I say 'What's a Co-ordinator supposed to look like?'"

The Counselor, Co-ordinator, Coach shakes his head finally: "I am what I am. I'd rather go out drinking than have tea with the faculty." That's the kind of guy Bart Gullong really is.
