THE CRO: End Of Renovation
by Austin Wrench
The College Voice

Curiously has abandoned campus lately as to when the Cro Snack Shop is scheduled to reopen.

Margaret Watson, Dean of Student Affairs, was predicting an October 1 opening, but "contractions and compliacations, specifically electrical ones, have pushed the opening back a week or two. Whenever you construct something, there is always that possibility of delay where something can go wrong," she added.

Watson hopes the snack shop will definitely be open by the time students return from fall break. "We're even hoping it might even open before the break," she commented.

Connecticut College students have felt the absence of this popular campus "hangout" in numerous ways. Michael Wydey, '87, remarked, "As a dance student, I'm always in Cro, and I truly miss hanging out in the snack shop when I have twenty minutes off from class."

The closing of the Cro snack shop even caught some upperclassmen unaware, as Yvonne Paine, '87, asserted, "I was away all last year, abroad, and so when I came back it was a big let down to find the snack shop closed. Where am I supposed to meet with my friends for casual conversations?"

Nevertheless, Watson feels the temporary loss of the snack shop was definitely worth the wait for students. "A major difference now with the snack shop is, I noted," "will be but open seven days a week." She also stated that, "the atmosphere will be much more pleasant for the student body in terms of the overall decor."

Students will now have lounge furniture, sectioned areas with juice boxes, and as Watson pointed out, "a much more intimate feeling and less cafeteria-like atmosphere in the new shop."

Terrorism & Study Abroad
by Beth Salome
The College Voice

The Paris bombings...the bombs found in Ireland and England...the list goes on. Daily-time there is news about the great numer of terrorist actions taking place. How has the rash of international terrorism affected the study abroad programs?

Phillip Ray, Dean of Study Abroad, affirmed that the recent terrorist acts have already directly affected the program. He stated Paris as an example. The study program in Paris is usually filled, but this year there are positions available.

Connecticut College does not run the study abroad programs itself, therefore the school's policy is trust in the programs. "We have every confidence in the study abroad system," said Dean Ray. "They are the best available; run by good people.

The same programs have been used for years and the administration assumes they wouldn't be running if it wasn't safe. The programs themselves determine the safety and will pull the students out if there is a serious threat. They have taken precautions such as new security systems for housing and evacuation plans. Last spring, when terrorism was a hot topic among the American public, the administration assumed the programs were safe. However, some are taking precautions by going to small towns or more unusual cities. Some students have also decided to study in the United States with the twelve-college exchange or the Washington program. Ray stressed, "There hasn't been a big swing yet but if the situation continues I expect we'll see more this year."

Contrary to the statistics showing a decline in students studying abroad, students here do not seem to fear terrorism, making plans in spite of the potential danger.

"I do not think that terrorism should hold a person back from going abroad, but I do think that people have to keep terrorism in the front of their minds and not forget that it does exist," said Kim Meade, '90, an American international student from Milan, Italy. Another student who resides overseas in Barcelona, Kelly McCann, '90, commented, "I think it is ridiculous to pass up an opportunity like going abroad for a one in a million chance."

Matt Sannes, '90, stated, "I feel that in this situation if Americans panic it only makes it worse because then the terrorists have succeeded."

"The experience gained from traveling abroad greatly outweighs the risk. We can't allow terrorism to govern our lives and plan our future," said Debbie Marconi, '89, who is planning to go abroad. Chris Coyne '88, who is also going abroad said, "It's definitely something that crosses your mind but I wouldn't let it bother me that much. I change my decision because that means [terrorism] works."

Many upperclassmen have already planned study abroad despite the recent terrorist acts. "I think the experience gained by traveling abroad greatly outweighs the risk. We can't allow terrorism to govern our lives and plan our future," said Debbie Marconi, '89, who is planning to go abroad. Chris Coyne '88, who is also going abroad said, "It's definitely something that crosses your mind but I wouldn't let it bother me that much. I change my decision because that means [terrorism] works."

The rash of terrorism has caused the decline in the number of students studying abroad. Students at Connecticut College, however, are continuing to go abroad, seeming unintimidated by terrorism. Ray commented, "It wasn't that they were scared, but they were invited to a party. What they did with the car was inexcusable. I think the students are more concerned about drugs or what but they were trying to run people over," he said.

Page 8 of the student newspaper has been cut, allowing full page of content. The second violent occurrence happened two days later during a party on campus.

According to the police report, William Price, a non-

As we peer through the red tower which will "read" "Eat" in the new Cro snack shop, we find reason to rejoice. Finally the students will have a place they can call their own.

The advantages of having a new -- and aesthetically pleasing -- snack shop are obvious. The old Cro snack shop was a strange mix between a hospital waiting room, an Exxon gas station, and a cheap diner. From what we can see, the new place will actually look inviting.

Is this attention to detail a signal that the Administration is willing to finally invest in a real student center?

According to certain members of the Administration, tentative plans have been examined for a potential rebuilding of Cro. The plans, as described, would offer much more room for student activities, recreating Cro as a true student center.

We urge the Administration to begin as soon as possible to build a new Cro. The fund raising energies which were unleashed to transform the Athletic Center from an idea to a reality should be harnessed and refocused on the student center. A commitment to this project is required now.

Students have waited long enough.

The Administration should not waste anymore time.

Vote Democratic Party

To The Editor:

President Reagan is an attractive person, an ef- fective speaker, especially on television. Why wouldn't he be? He is a professional actor.

However, we do not think—and the polls broadly support our views—that his POLICIES are in the best interests of the country. Please ask yourself where you stand on the following:

Do you support budget deficits, far exceeding in total those of all other Administrations since the founding of the Nation?

Do you approve borrowing from abroad to finance those deficits, so that our country has shifted from being the worlds first creditor nation, to the world's leading debtor?

Do you approve, as a consequence of our bor- rowing and the cheapening of our dollar, our in- ability to export? Our decline as the world's major manufacturer in steel, and many other basic pro- ducts?

Do you approve the appearance in most major cities of thousands, and in some cases, tens of thousands of homeless families and individuals?

Do you approve hungry and homeless Americans, and declining Federal responsibility for caring for them?

Do you approve the emasculation of Medicare health care—at all levels, hospitalization, home care and nursing home services—for the elderly?

Do you approve slashing support for vocational and higher educational grants and loans for young people seeking to improve themselves?

Do you support withholding rigorous sanctions against the racist white regime in South Africa?

If you agree with Mr. Reagan, you should register, and vote Republican, now, in time for a change. Register—it is not too late—and vote across the board for our many fine Democratic candidates, including none other than our own Pro- fessor William Cibes, running to continue as our State Representative.

You may be beguiled by the President's effect- ive showmanship, but I, definitely am not. The following little piece of doggerel expresses my view. When next he appears on TV, look, and look again.

PRESIDENT REAGAN ON TELEVISION

A being as cold as the cold artie night.
He goes on the air waves with fiction or fact—
However, serves best to embellish his act.

He's learned that an audience must have its fun—
With every few lines, a joke or a pun.
He looks to his left, and he looks to his right.
But he sees not the people, their problems, their ignorance, bigoted, shallow, and mean,
He ably directs a like-minded team.

A leader who's leading toward darkness and night?

Vandalism Continues

To The Editor:

It's fun not to be the bearer of bad news and it is, or should be, disrupting to read it. This letter con- verts the bad news that evidence of the mutilation of Library newspapers and periodicals has again been discovered.

Instead of tearing an entire article from the front page of the September 24 Washington Post, or snapping several small items from the Hartford Courant of the same date, might these not have been photographed for a measly twenty or thirty cents, in the highly unlikely circumstance that they had to be copied at all?

A more grievous example is the 1968 volume of the National Geographic, discovered last week to have several crude excisions, although even that pales in comparison with the vandalism wrought on personal souvenirs brought back from the Soviet Union by two students. Apparently it must be said again and again that it is time for a change. Register—it is not too late—and vote against the racist white regime in South Africa?

Poisonous Violence

To The Editor:

Rumor has it that the office of admissions was fooled. Apparently, the applications of some rowdy, third-grade practical jokers were ac- cepted, and these children elected to enroll in order to carry out their prank. So here they are, Connecticut College students. As would be expected, what they brought with themselves was trouble. Apparently, they are not getting along with some of the other kids at school. They think that the kid who likes to play on the left side of the sandbox is weird and that the one with the curly dark hair looks funny. But to them these are not idle conclusions. No! These are principles which demand action; they have taken to picking on 'these different' students. The latest rumor, 9/23/86, revealed actual violence in which a weapon was used against one of these entities. This poisonous behavior is unacceptable in general, but especially in our college atmosphere.

We are, after all, in college. That is supposed to mean that we are here to learn, not just in the classroom. Prejudice itself glorifies ig- norance. In conjunction with violence, it is a threat to a community. Our community cannot tolerate such mindlessness. Their attitudes partake of the same evil which inspired the actions of such creatures as Adolf Hitler, Joseph McCarthy, and Charles Manson. Perhaps the Klan might be invited to open a chapter on campus? At least if that happened, the news could not be silenced.

Eating Consideration

To The Editor:

Everyone seems to agree that eating in school cafeterias, especial- ly Harris, is not the most pleasing experience. The food lacks reality at times and occasionally poor organization is evident. But as a student worker, I have seen incidences when my fellow students made the situation worse. Cafeteria dining would be greatly improv- ered if people would pick up their own dishes and put them on the con- veyer belt (or, in other dining rooms) on the racks provided. I'm a student worker, not a waitress and neither are the ladies.

Also, the lines and services would run much smoother if everyone put their window in, isn't it?

Anyway, the point is that I am in the bar, they are not. I can finally go to senior class parties as a senior, and resent the presence of non-seniors who sneak in, all the while knowing that is how past seniors looked at me. So, being a senior is great, right? We have all the fun, go to the "right" par- ties, know who we consider to be the "right" peo- ple, we always do the "right" thing, and our word is law. Did I mention that seniors are NEVER wrong? So I guess being a senior is great, all the time. Well, I won't lie to you, it is great. Except when you are too impressed with your own magnificence to realize that callos attitudes aren't so much fun to wake up with in the morning, and you wonder why you acted the way you did, a way you swore you'd never act. But most of all, you register, and it is time for a change. Register—it is not too late—and vote senior after May. Some will be scared to death, some will never look back. But we all will never forget our days at POLI, not a year impressed, in the meantime, we do not kill that brain cell.

Psychotic Senior

To The Editor:

I am a senior now. After four years, I somehow survived to reach that higher echelon of being a "senior". That means I am supposed to act cool, right? That I know all the answers. That I am perfectly justified in anything I do because, after all, I am a senior. I can be indifferent to people and situations now; I can judge, stereotype, and ignore whomever I please, because isn't it true that after four years of education, maturity, and New London, that I've seen it all? I do not have to be friendly to underclassmen I don't know, par- ticularly freshman, because I am a senior and they are not. Besides, if freshmen are supposed to act like freshmen, then don't it follow that we seniors should uphold our end of the bargain and act like seniors? My friends, most of them, are seniors. Those who are not, enjoy the fact that they can fool us into believing we are seniors. But most of all, I don't have to go to class. Hell, I've done that for three years now, don't you think I deserve a break? After I get my last party to party every night of the week, because that's what seniors are supposed to do, right? Once the bar opens, I can stare at the non-eligible through the windows and laugh that Demagogues sooner or later come under the close scrutiny of the Academia. Their alterior motives are revealed and they sometimes crudely approach towards complex problems in demagogic ways. The Academia provides competent and intelligent people with the necessary tranquillity and detachment for that endeavour. Occasionally the academia, or at least some of its members, falls under the spell of the demagogue. Academics endlessly question their theories and conclusions frequently accused by them of their splitting, they come to envy the apparent lack of self doubt, the sheer power of persuasion, the magnetism which the Damagoge possesses.

This is the moment when they are attacking the Garde Theater for being a classic demagoging tirade. He congratulated the audience. He congratulated the audience. He congratulated the audience. He congratulated the audience.

The Demagogue Has Arrived

by Antonio Kamara
The College Voice

The nastiest litter is not actually litter at all, it is the stuff that sticks to you. You walk through your dorm hallway or lobby. It is an accumulation of beer, food, and assorted gobbledy-gook. It's sticky and stays on your shoes for the rest of the day or until rain.

Eight of the floors were in this condition and several more were close to it. I can't even begin to imagine how they got this way. Visions of people gleefully pour- beer, drinking and stomping on potato chips come to mind.

I don't know what the answer is. The best I can do is try to put a few thoughtless, but something should be done. Students have to be encouraged to choose an individual and collective responsibility to keep their dorms clean. It is true that college is somewhat of an artificial en- vironment, but it is also true that some habits of living that are not going to pick up after anyone. Next time please take the seven seconds to walk your pizza boxes to the garbage can. Some of us are not very good hurdlers.
Alcohol Delivery to Campus on 'Trial-Basis'

by Eric Carter
The College Voice

Each fall, Oakes Ames, President of the College, sends a letter to local stores in the New London area informing them of the college's alcohol policies. The year's letter included a codeword pertaining to the new drinking age which says, "roughly 75 percent of our students are under the legal drinking age." The letter also informed store owners that illegal deliveries would continue to be allowed on campus under "trial basis" as long as this new law is enforced.

President Ames plans to monitor the deliveries through information passed to him from the housekeepers.

However, Steve Barriere, housekeeper in Park dormitory, was not aware of this obligation. "As far as I know, we are not obligated to turn in drinking-offenders unless a problem arises from the drinking. We act as counselors, not policemen," he said.

"Trial basis" indicates that deliveries could be stopped. Because Conn College is a private institution, the owners are not required to deny access to the college. They can do this without infringing on the students rights as customers.

A student can still drive to the local liquor store and buy a case of beer or a case of liquor from a bar, even if the student is under the legal drinking age, but he does not have access to a car.

Last year the legal drinking age rose and Conn's campus bar was threatened. Campus deliveries are under cloudy skies this year.

It is the faculty of Conn. College working towards a dry campus.

The core of the issue is the conflict of interests between the College and the community.

Brailey continued to cite examples of the effects of overconsumption.

He said that recently one student, after drinking, went to Yale, the drinking record was broken. A student was served 42 drinks at a local bar to claim the drinking record. The student's friends threw him into bed later that night after he had passed out.

Brailey said that a greater awareness of alcohol's consequences rather than an increase in the amount of drinking is needed.

The legal justification for Conn's responsibilities to its students is complicated. Each case is approached individually because of the many variables involved.

While there is no set of guidelines, there are general guidelines followed on a case-by-case basis. The number of students involved is the most important factor.

Financial liability for students is another concern of the college. However, both Ames and Brailey have stressed that the financial aspect plays a less important role in Conn's alcohol policies than health considerations.

The economic consequences of reckless students still outweigh the legal or moral considerations.

In the morning he was 42 drinks at a local bar to claim the drinking record. The student's friends threw him into bed later that night after he had passed out.

Brailey and the other four truly allowed to take that kind of danger to the campus.

The letter took us three years to write. We talked to people from all walks of like," said Stein, one of the five Bishops in the country who wrote "The Challenge for Peace, God's promise and our Response.

Reilley and the other four Bishops spoke with members of the Reagan Administration, including Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, the Secretary of State, and the Office for Arms Control. They also spoke with former Secretaries of Defense James Schlesinger and Harold Brown. They also met with moral theologians, physicians, and scripture scholars, to aid them in the preparation of the document.

In June of 1982 the first draft was completed and made public. At that time, Reilley and the other authors of the letter were meeting with Bishops in Washington, D.C. They met with Bishops from Rome, France, Germany, and Belgium. The second draft was completed in October of that same year and was well-received by other Bishops from the Catholic Church.

This letter has been written in a moment of great crisis.

People must be made vividly aware of the dangers of our time. Our letter has focused on a moral dimension to this problem. It is simply this. "May we do everything that we can be doing of doing? Who is going to answer that question? Is anyone truly allowed to take that kind of risk?"

The letter is not a political statement and it does not support unilateral Americanism. It is simply a moral teaching Reilley said. "It gives hope. We are not quite out of the woods yet. But it recognizes that the possibility of war cannot be wiped out entirely."

Peace making, according to Reilley, is not an optional commitment. "It is a non-negotiable conviction of the faith we hold."

The letter concluded by asking people to be instruments of peace, "the same peace that St. John wrote about 300 years ago."
Finding Answers to Housing Problem

by Liz Michalski
The College Voice

This semester, the housing situation has become a serious concern at Conn. College. The amount of room available is no longer adequate to meet the needs of the students. According to the Assistant Dean for Residential Life, Marji Lipshez, this is due to a variety of factors.

"The freshmen class is a little bigger than it was last year, plus fewer juniors went away this semester. Also, fewer people move off campus," said Lipshez.

Two faculty houses, North Cottage and 7 North Ridge Road, have been converted to hold sixteen upperclassmen. According to Lipshez, in an effort to deal with the shortage of space this fall.

The students living there were given a choice, and some were given an extension on the infirmary payphone. "We didn't have closets until the third day. That was the weirdest thing. But other than that, it's great!"

Despite the way things are working out, Lipshez said she is still concerned. "The spring semester could pose a serious problem. Usually in the spring we have a higher population. For that reason, I don't think we're accepting any transfer students."

And there are other problems. Before this year, students could count on single rooms upstairs. This may no longer be true.

"Not until school opened were we sure we had space for everyone," said Lipshez. Some of the problems involve student attitudes. "Students decide to transfer or go away, and they don't tell us. So we don't know we have an empty room until school starts and nobody's there."

This type of behavior hurts their peers who are anxiously waiting for housing.

The Housing Department is taking positive steps to counteract the problem. An S.G.A. committee has been formed to look into the issue from the student perspective, possibly through a survey, and will be making recommendations to Dean Gallager. Off campus living is also being explored as an alternative.

According to Committee Chairman Bruce Turner, they will probably also be fighting to keep the two cottages as student housing. Another job of the committee will be to educate the students on the lottery. "Ignorance in terms of the lottery creates a lot of problems," Turner said.

Lipshez agrees. "There are always a lot of rumor and it's important for people to come to us if they have any questions. There are so many myths, and good communication is vital to making this work."

Watson also stated, "the students had tremendous input into the actual planning of the new snack shop." Roger Kaufman, '86, designed the overall decor of the area, which was then expanded upon by professional architects.

Students are not alone in waiting anxiously for the snack shop to re-open. Marji Lipshez, Assistant Dean for Residential Life, commented, "I am anticipating the opening of the snack shop because it gives me an opportunity to interact with students. I ordinarily do not have contact with." Lipshez is concerned though, with the possibility that faculty will only "drink their coffee in the Blaustein dining room and no longer eat in Cro."

"I hope that there will be some sort of informal interaction among faculty and students," she added, "and the faculty will indeed come back to Cro."

Philip E. Ray, Associate Dean of the College and Co-Chairman of Academic Advisors, feels faculty will come back to Cro.

"Last spring, when both Blaustein and Cro were open," he said, "I always saw several faculty members in the snack shop. Blaustein lunches do not always appeal to everyone and faculty will no doubt want to go to Cro for the variety they offer, and because they want to." When the Cro snack shop finally does re-open there will be some sort of grand opening, "like a ribbon cutting ceremony," said Watson. "Pizza service, hot dogs, grinders, milk-shakes—all those goodies will be back," she affirmed.

Christine Adams, '88, seemed to echo many students' remarks, when she stated, "I'm curious to see what the place is like. I miss the social aspect and of course, those great pizzas!"
DEAR MISS MANNERS - I believe this problem to be fairly common in this era of personal freedoms and easy intimacies. A co-worker of mine insists on burdening me with the extremely personal and strange details of her private life. While I wish to maintain a professional relationship, both her friendship and her confidences are unsolicited, and I find them most disconcerting.

Once she has favored me with her latest confession, I am expected to reciprocate with minutiae from my own private life, which I prefer to keep divorced from my career. I do not wish to alienate this woman, nor do I want to insult her by telling her how strange I find her problems or by cutting her off in mid-paragraph, but I find these conversations intolerable. What would be the best way to return to a more businesslike climate with minimum offense and hurt?

GENTLE READER -- Having been chosen as confidante, you are free to advise this woman that you think it could be damaging to her professionally to have all this information floating around the office. When she protests that she only tells you, you should look horrified and exclaim: "Oh, were these supposed to be secrets? I just assumed that what you told me, you must be telling everyone."

The system, he said, is available for historical and educational research. The state system, he said, is designed not only to punish an individual who has done something wrong, but to protect him as well. "In such a small community like this one, it is more detrimental than beneficial to expose the case of an individual," Buck said.

The Connecticut College Archives Ad Hoc Study Committee met five times during the 1985-1986 school year to discuss a general mandate, policies for access and collection, and the need for increased space in the College Archives Department located on the second floor of Palmer Library.

One of the many proposals made to the Board of Trustees two weeks ago by the Archives Study committee was that "personal student records will be restricted for seventy-five years after graduation of from the last severance of relations with Connecticut College."

"The Archives are the memory of the college," said Mary Kent, Special Collections Librarian and Archivist. "They make the records of the college available for historical and educational research. The state of the Archives is in a dangerous position at present due to understaffing, overcrowding, and a lack of general policy."

"I don't have time to find materials for people and then refile other materials since most of my time is dedicated to helping people," said Kent. "Another Archivist is essential," she continued. "I can't imagine continuing without one."

"Ideally, I would like to work with a younger person who has had archival training. Then it would be possible to organize a program where the offices of the college could send materials over every year so they could be incorporated into the Archives instead of getting lost in the shuffle or piling up for year's end and when they are available to no one."

The original deed of gift for the land upon which the college now resides, given by the Mohegan Indians, photos of the 1938 hurricane, and tapes of Roosevelt speaking at the College are a few of the many archives in the collection. In addition to the needs of the Archives department, the rare books collection is also in danger.

"We need climate control to preserve the books," said Kent.

The present fluctuations in temperature and humidity in the library are most destructive for all books and papers," she continued, "but are most serious for rare and irreplaceable materials."

The proposal by the committee included an increase in space for the Archives and Rare Books Collection. The Symser Poetry area, now located on the second floor of Palmer, would be moved to the third floor where some rare books are presently caged. These rare books would then, in turn, be moved down to a newly enclosed space on the second-floor. The total estimate, including labor and materials for this project, totals $44,000.

The proposed policy for collecting materials included records of the Board of Trustees and its Committees, administrative offices, academic departments, student organizations, publications, selected memorabilia, and all other materials related to the college and its students, alumni, faculty, and administrators.

"At present, I have no idea what and when the outcome of the Board will be," said Kent, "but we are not in the position to accept any large materials until we have more space and more assistance."

Rearranging Conn's Past

Drug Shorts

- More Officials Spoke Up Against What They Called Mounting 'HYSTERS' over drug use on the nation's campuses.

Days before President Reagan and Mrs. Reagan went on television to call for harsher tactics against drug abuse, Robert Atwell, president of the American Council on Education, told a University of the Pacific audience that "the use of cocaine is widespread, but I don't think the level of hysteria surrounding the issue is warranted."

"There is no evidence the problems are any worse on a college campus than anywhere else," Atwell said of a congressional bill to give the U.S. Secretary of Education the power to withhold funds from campuses that don't have some kind of drug prevention program.

"Drug testing," he added, "is a huge problem. One has to be extremely careful because of false results."

- Jack Friedenthal, Stanford's Faculty Representative to the NCAA, said, "It's monstrous to single out athletes (for drug testing). Why not engineering and English majors, drama students and Stanford Daily Staffers?"

"We test athletes at Stanford like all other students," he said, ceding the school will comply "reluctantly" with the new NCAA rule to test athletes for drugs somehow.

He won't start a mandatory program because "the students won't stand for it, being treated like cattle."

In August, Duke Athletic Director Tom Butters asked administrators to consider subjecting all students to the same drug rules athletes must follow.

- Random Mandatory Drug Tests Violate athletes' constitutional rights to privacy and protection against "government searches without probable cause," the Arizona Civil Liberties Union argued in a letter to University of Arizona President Henry Koffler last week.

The ACLU letter said in treating "this very real problem" of drug abuse, schools risk staging "an even greater danger" in bringing the government into students' lives illegally.

- More Than Eight of Every Ten Colleges have some sort of drug testing of athletes this fall, the Richmond Times-Dipose estimated in a survey.

-Campus Drug Arrests and Trials, meanwhile, continued as a court freed on a $10,000 bond a University of Mississippi student arrested on cocaine selling charges, and South Carolina court sentenced a Clemson student convicted of possession of cocaine to 10 days in jail, a $500 fine and a year's probation.

Counseling Services

by Stephanie Hamed

At Connecticut College, there are counseling services available for students who are coordinated by Laura B. Hesslein. This counselor is available to meet with students to help them deal with social and emotional problems.

- This year, changes have been implemented in the system, limiting each student to sixteen one-hour sessions per year, regardless of need.

"Ideally, I'd like to be able to give more to more students," said Laura B. Hesslein, Co-coordinator of the Counseling Services at the Infirmary. The new system being tried is an attempt to improve services to students.

Hesslein explained the reasons for the changes and the intended effects. "The reason is because of the limitations of the staffing that we have here. We're not able to give the type of service many people would like. Our limited result from a lack of available funding."

The Counseling Services used to operate with a system of unlimited visits. The student got four free sessions as a consult, then was charged twenty dollars per session, unlimited.

In 1985-86, the system was changed to no charge. Then, there are sixteen sessions allowed for the year, with no charge except for cancellations.

Both of these systems left large waiting lists. The intention of this new system was explained by Dr. Daniel E. Bender, the Supervising Psychologist. "Ideally, more people will get a chance for some of what they need. Unfortunately, some people won't be able to have long term counseling."

Because of the cut in the number of available visits per student, some of the students may have to pay for off-campus counseling. An anonymous sophomore said, "It's not fair for people on financial aid, because they might not be able to afford paying for counseling, and everyone needs to talk to someone."

Another sophomore, Mary, said, "If people have to go off campus, they just won't do it."

Mary commented on the need for counseling at this stage of life, because of the tension. "I want to feel like there's a system I can go to for professional, objective help. It's hard to ask friends when they're going through the same things."

This year is an experiment. "Our hope is that more students will use it, and the waiting list will be shorter," said Bender. "There has been no increase in this year of available hours."

The Counseling Services' expenses, according to Hesslein, are already high. If more hours and another counselor were added, costs would increase. The alternative to expanding the program would be to refer students to off campus services, as do some other colleges.

The Counseling Services are attempting to find the best way to serve the students. In time, that may be to set up a system in which everyone is able to get the care they need.

Quote Me: Should Marijuana Be Legalized?

by Lee May

1) JEFF KOVACS: I try not to think about it, but if I had to, I would like it because they don't tell you what it is not supposed to be done. As they legalized alcohol, I think they should legalize marijuana, too.

2) BRYAN SANCHEZ: I think it should be legal because of the many people that do it and there isn't a problem. The government needs to do something.

3) MARIA MCCARTHY: No, because marijuana is more mind-altering than something like alcohol.

4) NANCY BARBER: Yes, because so many people are using it, and so many kids use the drug just like it's smoking a cigarette. They might as well legalize it so that it's not such a hassle to get it.

5) GREGOR BAPTISTE: No, it should not be legalized. It's very harmful to the health.

Students taking marijuana will definitely pull the rank of the school down so you shouldn't legalize it all.
Terrorism

by Lisa Allegrata
The College Voice

In retaliation to the recent terrorist attacks, France has imposed visa stipulations and increased the French Police hunt for those responsible for the bombing attacks. France also called together the twelve nations in the European Community to discuss the terrorism problem in Europe.

At the meeting it was decided that the nations would work together to link their police forces with better communication so that it would be easier to target terrorists' movements, supplies of money, arms and equipment, so that [they] can harass and disrupt them.

France has been repeatedly attacked by terrorists in the last nine months because they hold convicted terrorist Georges Ibrahim Abdallah. Abdallah is the Leader of the Committee for Solidarity with Arab and Middle Eastern Political Prisoners, the group that has claimed responsibility for all of the bombing attacks. Abdallah and nine others have been making the terrorists attacks, but a full in activity leads the French to believe that more bombings are on the way.

Not all Conn students are dissuaded from travel to France--or other European nations. When one student was asked whether or not she would continue her plans to travel to France in spite of the recent terrorism, she replied, "Yes, the terrorism doesn't bother me at all."

Another student, however, responded, "No, terrorism scares me." Terrorism abroad also affects Conn students: to what extent, however, remains to be seen.

Stockholm Agreement

BLOOM COUNTY

by Berke Breathed

The College Voice

On September 21st, in Stockholm, negotiators from NATO and the Warsaw Pact agreed on a plan that would diminish the possibilities of war in Europe.

An agreement was given on the following points: warning will be given in advance of a war and foreign inspection of each side's forces will be permitted to prevent a surprise attack.

Since 1979, this is the first major security package concerning Europe. This new positive agreement is greeted with skepticism and pessimism by many Connecticut College students. Senator Katherine Doak said "Everything will be covered up anyway. I don't believe those measures will be effective."

There are limitations to the agreement: the number of inspections is set at three per year, and notification will only be given about military exercises involving more than 13,000 soldiers. There was a major disagreement between the two parties about the number of soldiers. The Americans, knowing the Soviets operate with small numbers, wanted to lower this figure.

Some Conn students feel these measures are not seen as the beginning of a trustful relationship between the two superpowers. Junior Wendy Bauer says, "The executions of these prisoners would be positive, but the problem is and has always been: we don't trust them and they don't trust us."

The ability of NATO and the Warsaw Pact to conclude the meeting with concrete results shows a real effort on both parts to create a more peaceful relationship. Freshman Bill Best summed up the situation. "The mere fact that they are negotiating shows good will between East and West, although no substantial progress is being made towards peace."

Spirit of the Orchestra
by Amanda Hathaway
The College Voice

The Connecticut College orchestra is suffering from low morale, and Clara Zahler, the temporary director, is determined to improve it.

However, she must first impress upon students the joys of the orchestra in hope that they might join. Peter Stacco, the orchestra's official director has taken a break for the fall semester, leaving Zahler to direct.

"I have found it very difficult because students who were here the previous years are the ones with the attitude: they come to the first rehearsal and think, "I'm not going to keep practicing,"' Zahler said.

"I lack of commitment is the main problem and until that changes [the orchestra] will remain the same. Without the help of the students, the orchestra can't survive."

Zahler said, "I wish it could be more of a social club in terms of making good music together and enjoying ourselves. A lot of people are out there who are very competent; there is a very interesting program with very varied music."

"It was a first rate orchestra," said HDR. "It's so important to see my professor's work." Montana was perfect, and Kurz evoked the best of my scenes. They are not there to make the students feel uncomfortable, they are not a threat."

"Instead the students should talk to the community members more; get to know them."

Maureen Spector, '90, a present member of the orchestra, said, "From what I know the orchestra has been regarded as not being a very good group, so students don't want to join because of the reputation. However, if they did join it would make it better."

"Right now it is made up mostly of students from the community, to make it better the students need to support it."

"I think with practice we're starting to sound better already and we've only had three rehearsals. The reputation will improve as well as the support at concerts."

Zahler said that the orchestra only needs "more spirit, it is not hopeless. Students can have a good time playing good music for the College. It is something good that everyone would benefit from."

The works by these three faculty members are the most noticeably unique in the exhibit. Many of Mr. Smiley's sculptures encourage interaction between the viewer and the work of art. His three movable sculptures, Virulanda II, Eccentric Orbiter, and Hover Landscape III, are dependent upon the viewer for their motion. Thus, the viewer becomes involved in the art.

Cynthia Rubin's computer art is a fascinating combination of technology and art. The colors she uses, when printed on the computer, seem much clearer than those in a painting. At the same time, the image itself is fuzzier than a painted image in true twentieth century. Cohen and Mr. Rubin show that technology can be taken out of the laboratory and into the artist's studio.

The four collages by Maureen McCabe were also the subject of much discussion at the opening. They are so complex that it is impossible to look at them over and over continually find some new aspect which had previously been undiscovered.

The initial reaction of many of the crowd who attended the 1986 Faculty Exhibition was positive and enthusiastic. Once the entire show is viewed, this enthusiasm does not wane. The exhibit is well worth seeing and will remain up until October 31.

When asked what she thought of her visit to Cummings, one student responded, "It would have been good to see what, but the fact that the art and the professors made it all the more exciting."

A Healthy Baby
by Fernando Espinosa-Amojo
Publisher & Editor
The College Voice

"Baby with the Bathwater" is a black comedy by Christopher Durang opened in Palmer last Thursday evening. The performance was an impressive display of talent, combining sophisticated acting and simple, yet effective technical effects.

Directed in a lawless manner by scion Scott Lowell and produced by the Department of Theater and Music. "Baby" is the story of a young and weird couple and their firstborn child. The play is a witty narrative of emotional and mental poverty, of zaniness and insanity. The characters are expertly dramatized in a deliberate manner, thereby focusing and empowering the play.

The couple is played by Hannah Treitel as Helen and by Dave Fendig as John. Treitel plays a neurotic, sometimes bordering on the psychopathic, mother obsessed by the child, while at the same time repelled by it. "I wish I'd have had a healthy baby," she says. Fendig's character is a continuation between the stereotypical father (careful and loving) and the corner bent. His continual vacillation for love for his wife and child and the feeling of entrapment which dominates his life, eventually leads him to alchoholism and insanity.

Treitel and Fendig's excellent comedic timing which guides role considerable appear. Easily switching from "normal" to insanity, she displayed versatility in her acting. Fendig played the part of the pathetic father in her acting. Fendig played insanity, she displayed versatility and comedic timing which gave her an incredible range of the versatile character who was real and original and colourful, Amy Povich, as Kate, a member of the twee-suit-Reebok-yuppie generation, dominated the stage in all her scenes. Cynthia is a poor neighbor of John and Helen whose poverty — unlike her neighbor's — is monetary and not emotional. "I don't have any furniture," she says. This leads to the death of her newborn baby at the mouth of her hungry German shepherd, while she is out of her apartment buying dog and baby food. Durang gives Cynthia plenty of funny lines which Davis handles expertly. Yet one is compelled to lock her deeply thus discovering that really, Cynthia is the sanest of all the characters.

The complete denial of her baby's death is not because of emotional fragility, but just the opposite. "I may be forgetful," she says, "but the Baby has a chance!" After saying these words, which so aptly capsulize the play's theme, she runs away with the baby only to be killed by a speeding bus. The baby is fine, but remains in absolute to be killed by a bus; or in Cynthia's words, to have a "change".

"Baby" contained other remarkable performances. Kate Churchill played Angles, a National Enquirer reader, whose slow methodical manner of speaking made every line funny. Churchill, in a relatively small part, created a memorable character who was real and original and colourful. Amy Povich, as Kate, a member of the twee-suit-Reebok-yuppie set, was convincing and provided the perfect contrast to Churchill. Michael Scheneman was effective as the grown up baby. As the ultimate tragic hero in the play, it would have been easy for Scheeman to over-dramatize his part; he was, however, well-balanced and convincing.

Daniele O'Loughlin, playing the part of Mrs. Willoughby, created an original characterization of the over-confident school principal. In a smooth, brassy way, O'Loughlin played her role to the hilt. Rachel Tette, who played Miss Pringle, seemed to be mis-cast as the baby's teacher. Tette appeared to be more of an observer than a participant in the scene with O'Loughlin. This had the effect of slowing down the scene's pace. This was not as much Tette's fault, as the fault of the playwright, who failed to make the Miss Pringle character a worthy straight-man to the crazy Mrs. Willoughby.

Technically, the play worked. The lighting design by Geoff Wagg complemented the play and did not distract from the narrative. With the exception of a few mis-casts, Wagg's design flowed with the frantic pace of the dialogue. The set, designed by Ed Chablis, Diane Draye, and Scott Lowell, fits perfectly with Durang's work. The use of giant alphabet blocks, subtely decorated with a burning house and a school bus, created the impression that the world of the play was a toy box and the characters dolls (perhaps this is one of the main reasons the characters are so overdramatized).

A "Soothing" Evening of Music
by Eric Carter

The College Voice

Frank Church, a Conn College professor of Music, and Elizabeth Sawyer performed five pieces on Saturday night for a crowd of approximately 130 parents. Students were almost completely lacking in the audience. Grandparents, however, substituted for the missing descendants.

Bach, Brahms, and Beethoven, the epitome of the classic composers, contributed the majority of the pieces performed. Anton Webern, an ear- ly influence, and contemporary composer added two relatively modern pieces.

All five of the works were played with original technical precision. Church and Sawyer's long history of performing together contributed to a concise, well-timed concert. Albert and MaryAnn Yost, two veterans Frank Church fans said that "Frank played very well tonight." Unfortunately, this wasn't enough to keep some members of the audience awake.

The emotional aspect was missing, Ms. Sawyer hit her staccato notes and never faltered. She's hands, however, drifted upward without a hint of excitement. Jonathan Goodrich, a Conn student who managed to over-dramatize his part; he was, however, well-balanced and convincing. Tom Field, an audience member, said that Mr. Church set "an excellent example" for music students. He thought that the performance showed what "hours of practice could result in."

Willie Holloway, a freshman at C.C., provided what was probably the most accurate appraisal of the concert. "It was a soothing concert. They hit each note with resolution."

"The violincello isn't a flashy instrument. The listener should not be interested in the instrument's callous qualities. Instead, he should focus on the incredible range of the versatile instrument. Mr. Church did take advantage of the violincello's tonal spectrum. His nimble fingers walked the entirety of the fingerboard. He performed trills with an exactness that was inspiration. Tom Field, an audience member, said that Mr. Church set "an excellent example" for

Club Sports

by Sherwyn Smith
The College Voice

With twenty clubs comprising the Sports Club Council, Connecticut College students have been blessed with a diverse array of organizations from which to choose.

The Cycling Club, a new organization started by two enterprising Freshmen roommates, Todd Weyman and Peter Simpson, is ideal for the fitness enthusiast. Judging by the number of members, 48, it seems that the Cycling Club is just the thing some CONN students are looking for.

The club's activities have got them off to a fast start with rides to Ocean Beach and New London already this year. According to Weyman, joining the club is easy. "You don't have to be an accomplished cyclist, in fact you don't even have to own a bike. Just borrow a friend's."

Another new club on campus this year is Men's Volleyball headed by Freshman Ralph Saint Fort. With 18 players of differing skill levels (six advanced, six intermediate and six beginners), Saint Fort expects the club to be "competitive" when the season begins in the Spring. However, Saint Fort says a second objective of the club, "is to promote volleyball to students on campus. We want them to know that this form of recreation is here."

One of last year's new clubs, Women's Rugby, is entering its second year with hopes of having a good season. Junior Captain Chris Synodi comments that "with 20 members -- ten of whom are returning, we should be a tough opponent."

The team's schedule of four matches (Swarthmore, Wesleyan, Mount Holyoke and Brown) concludes the first of November, but will resume in the Spring. For now, however, Synodi wants the players to "have a good time."

Men's Rugby

by Jimmy Cudhdy
The College Voice

For the first time in two seasons, the Connecticut College Men's Rugby Team outplayed and out-hit a worthy opponent. But it only lasted for a half--CONN relinquished its 3-0 halftime lead, and was defeated by Coast Guard, 29-13, last Saturday.

A half of good, physical and exciting rugby, CONN replaced it's "A" team forwards with "B" team forwards, allowing all members a chance to play in front of their parents. The Coast Guard scored 28 seconds later. Sophomore Captain Walter O'Leary defended the line-up move by saying:

"It was a learning experience."

CONN opened up the scoring with Sophomore Jimmy Cudhdy's second drop-kick in two games to put the ruggers ahead 3-0. Later, on a well executed play from a split-back formation, Senior Bobby Behrens scored his first try of the year.

The conversion was missed.

CONN then proceeded to dominate the Coast Guard for the rest of the first half. The forwards had a strong game, winning many scrums and line-outs, and taking the play to the opposition. The backs had a few knock-ons, but the support was always there, especially from Junior Captains Ari Davidian.

Sophomore Mike Hartman also scored his first try of the year.

Sports Profile: Ripley Greppin

by Dave Gross
The College Voice

The Women's Cross Country Team is off to a fast start, and it only gets better. Senior Captain Ripley Greppin is at the head of the pack. Greppin has run herself into the CONN records books, owning the top mark in every statistical category. She has been team MVP for three straight years.

What makes these accomplishments especially impressive is that prior to coming to CONN, Greppin had never run competitively.

In high school, at St. Pauls, private school in Concord, N.H., Greppin focused on field hockey, squash and crew.

"When I came to CONN," Greppin said, "I intended to continue rowing, but I discovered that crew wouldn't start for a while so I kind of stumbled onto track one day with my roommate."

Greppin has, with the exception of this year, been involved in both cross country and crew during the fall season. "I find that the two sports compliment each other. The practices fit together, by being at 3:00 and 5:00. The running helps with the cardiovascular and crew has strengthened my muscles," Greppin said.

"I didn't know how I'd like it. What's making it work are the members. They are my teammates. Running with them right by my side, with all of us encouraging each other. It's fantastic."

Greppin's coach, Ned Bishop, heaps praise on his captain, commenting on her desire and sense of the team concept. "I have never coached a runner like Ripley, who is willing to push, to work herself until she drops," Bishop said. "The effort she puts in and the results she has achieved have been a great example for other runners." Greppin has been the complete team member, with a blend of determination, hard-work, leadership, and love of her teammates. She has made the most of her running career here at CONN.

In the past years, Ripley would always finish way ahead. Now she has two teammates by her side and five others right behind her."

Another plus Greppin brings to the team is her leadership. With her three years experience against top level competition, she knows what it's like," Bishop said. "Now, when we go into the big meets, Ripley is able to tell the younger members what to expect. This is very important because half of this year's squad is comprised of Freshmen."

In her four years, Greppin has achieved many milestones. She has run the school's fastest 5,000 meter race with a mark of 18:56. She holds CONN's team course record of 21:00. Last year in the NECAC's, she finished a strong ninth place. More important than the records, she has earned is the way in which she participates on the team. Greppin has been the team's nucleus. She has made the most of her running career here at CONN.
Intramurals
by Fran Ryan
Assoc. Sports Editor
Intramurals are off to a strong start with flag-football, six-a-side soccer, and three-a-side basketball already under way. These three first quarter sports are accommodating students with varied interests and talents. Competing on all teams are both varsity athletes and people who simply enjoy the competition. Most sports are scheduled for play on three days each week, including Sundays. Because the schedule has been so rigorous, the championships for first quarter sports are drawing near. The registration period for second quarter sports begins in the middle of October.

"Video tapes of the championships will be shown in Crv once the dust from the construction has cleared," commented intramural Caroline Twomey (86). "Also, the champions of each sport will receive Intramural Championship T-shirts."

Vying for the Championship soccer T-shirts are five teams. Thus far, all of the games have been decided by forfeit. John Knupp, commissioner of the league maintains that the "emphasis is on taking things lightly and having fun." He expects participation to increase as the Championships draw closer.

There are eleven football teams looking to make their screen debuts in Crv. In first place is the Park squad with a record of 4-0. Hamilton and Morrison are tied for second place with records of 3-1. Commissioner Alan Rozansky is pleased with participation.

"We've had about 20 players out for each team."

With the first intramural season drawing to a close, Twomey is very enthusiastic.

"There proves to be a lot of excitement and fun yet to come in this 1986 intramural year."

Men's Soccer match

Soccer Schizophrenia
by Gregory Long
The College Voice

The home crowds have been especially great.

Not only has the soccer team performed schizophrenically-statistic-wise, the Camels, mentally, cannot get it together. Both home games, against Coast Guard and Wesleyan, have seen defensive lapses and a "lack of composure," according to Coach Bill Lessig. Conversely, the away games have contained the "explosive" Camel offense and a strong young defense.

What is the answer to Conn's "Jekyll and Hyde" syndrome?

"When our young kids get into pressure situations, they revert back into their high school style of play: kick and run," Lessig says. "Wesleyan is an NESCAC caliber team and they came to play.

Conn fell quickly behind Wesleyan as the visiting team scored two goals within the first five minutes of play. A third was added in the second half. That was the first two scores that Lessig feels disrupted the team's confidence.

"The two early scores tested our team character. We just weren't mentally prepared for that.

Men's Soccer seems to be fielding two teams this year: one that plays away games and one that plays at home. The Camels (2-2) were shutout by Wesleyan last Saturday, 3-0, marking their second straight defeat at home. Both Conn wins were achieved in an allen territory, namely at Fairfield and Bowdoin. The apparent "schizophrenia" does not go unnoticed by Coach Bill Lessig. "You know, we have yet to score at home," he said. "It's really disappointing. The home crowds have been especially great.

Not only has the soccer team performed schizophrenically-statistic-wise, the Camels, mentally, cannot get it together. Both home games, against Coast Guard and Wesleyan, have seen defensive lapses and a "lack of composure," according to Lessig. Conversely, the away games have contained the "explosive" Camel offense and a strong young defense.

What is the answer to Conn's "Jekyll and Hyde" syndrome?

"When our young kids get into pressure situations, they revert back into their high school style of play: kick and
run," Lessig says. "Wesleyan is an NESCAC caliber team and they came to play.

Conn fell quickly behind Wesleyan as the visiting team scored two goals within the first five minutes of play. A third was added in the second half. That was the first two scores that Lessig feels disrupted the team's confidence.

"The two early scores tested our team character. We just weren't mentally prepared for that.

Women's Tennis Improving

The College Voice

The Connecticut College Women's Tennis Team put on an impressive performance last weekend during the State Tournament at Trinity College. This year's tournament included CONN, Southern Connecticut, Trinity, The University of Connnecticut, Central Connecticut, and The University of Hartford.

Although CONN did not win any state titles, both the singles and doubles teams played with poise and displayed a great deal of potential talent for the remainder of the season.

In number one singles, Senior Christine Turner lost her first round match to the number one seed, but then played exceptionally well to win her consol-dation finals match, 6-2, 6-1.

"Christine played a near-perfect singles match," Sheryl Yeary, head coach of CONN said. "She moved the ball around well and had her opponent on the defense throughout the match.

In other singles action,
Sophomore Holly Barkley and Senior Casey Sims both lost in the first round but like Turner, played strong in the consolation finals and both defeated their Southern Connecticut opponents.

Freshman Danielle O'Loughlin
and Sophomore Laura Gabbert made it to the state finals in doubles but lost in the main draw, 2-6, 6-3, 6-1.

According to Yeary, "Danielle and Laura fought hard to capture the state title but they could not get quite enough momentum in the third set. In dual-match play the two are still undecided.

In other doubles action,
Freshman Christie Cobb and Amy Spain lost in the first round but defeated Southern in the consolation match, 6-1, 6-3.

CHARLES LUCE, Connecticut College Athletic Director, says that this past Saturday's CONN Invitationals "demonstrate that CONN is becoming a leader in the field of college athletics."
Over 100 female runners from a dozen schools competed in the 5000 meter cross country race near the CONN athletic center, while over 60 men ran the 8000 meter course.

Inside the athletic center, eight teams battled in the CONN
Volleyball Invitational. Squads from Albertus Magnus, Bard, Colby
Sawyer, CONN, Roger Williams, Skidmore, Trinity and Williams competed in the day-long event.

"These invitations are good for our school and our students," Luce said. "They bring a lot of kids to our campus and give the school a great deal of exposure.

Senior Sue Landau played her final field hockey game last Thursday without even knowing it. Landau suffered a broken foot during CONN's 5-1 victory against Smith, yet she played almost the entire game on one foot.

"I'm not sure when it happened," Landau said. "It might have been before the game or during it. I'm not sure."

Landau "single-footedly" led Conn in the Smith game, scoring tree goals before leaving the match with five minutes left.

"My foot hurt a real lot that night," she said. "The next day I got it x-rayed and found out it was broken.

Landau finishes her career at Conn as the school's all-time leading goal scorer and point getter.

"I didn't know it would be my last game," Landau said. "At least I ended on a good note. I'm going to support the team the rest of the way.

"It's open to everyone," says Cathy Horne, CONN's athletic trainer, commenting on the Therapeutic Massage that is offered weekly at Conn.

Horne and Martha Myers, a professor from the dance department, decided last year that massage should be offered to the college community.

"Originally, it was designed for athletes and dancers," Horne said, "but at first, only faculty members came since they were the only ones who could afford it."

Horne says that the price ($11 for a half hour, $21 for an hour) is cheaper than one would find elsewhere, with fees averaging$30-$35 per hour.

Lucille Gecewicz, who has a degree from the Connecticut Center for Massage Therapy and is certified by the American Massage Therapy Association, does the massages every Friday from 11:00 to 6:00 in a dance department office in Crow.

This type of massage is ideal for people with tight muscles or sore backs, Horne explains. It increases circulation to muscles, improves flexibility, and takes away pain. However, Horne points out that this is not the type of massage that puts to sleep, it is therapy.

Ned Bishop, women's cross country coach, said that "it's doing wonders for me and for kids on my team."

"It's good for everyone," she said.

Last year, 100 massages were done, while in three weeks this year, Gecewicz has done over 30 massages.

"It's beginning to catch on," Horne said.

Those interested in getting information about a massage can call Horne at the athletic center.

VOICE ATHLETE OF THE WEEK: Junior Christa Burgess, a midfielder on the Women's Soccer Team earns the honors this week. It was Burgess' goal with 3:28 left in the second overtime, that gave CONN a spectacular upset victory over Mount Holyoke last Monday.

Mount Holyoke was ranked 19th nationally and sixth in New England Division 3.

Burgess also is tied for the team lead in goals (3) and total points with seven.
