Conn Falls in US News Rankings

By John Beecro

The September 23rd issue of the US News and World Report featured the 2003 ranking of what it calls America's Best Colleges, a numeri- cal system that ranks the top 300 col- leges and universities. Connecticut College, which three years ago ranked 32nd, placed 79th.

The college now shares the rank with six other institutions including Bucknell University, University of the South, Kentucky, Lafayette, and Scripps Colleges. Last year the college shared 64th rank with Macalester College, and with an overall ranking of 42.

Conn fell seven points in overall score and plummeted from 53rd to 60th in Faculty Resources, while Macalester, which retained its rank- ing at an 26th, fell from 27th to Conn's place at 53rd in the same category.

According to the Report, "the ranking system rests on two pillars, it relies on quantitative measures important to Society of Political Philosophy, which she now serves as a Councilor. She is also a member of the Executive Board of Women in Philosophy.

In her overview of "550s of War," An 's lecture, Professor Crenshaw stated that her talk would address the "downfall" policy changes. At the start of any semester, it is given that the majority of students will browse the bookstore, wondering how and why the textbooks required for class can cost so much, for often what is only one semester's worth of use.

This has led students to explore options beyond those presented in the campus bookstore. Utilizing the technology now available, the best deal in textbooks is no longer necessarily finding that one student who has yet to walk into an English class.

The internet now offers a veri- ety of bookstores, news and used books. For example, the book titled "Single Variable Calculus: Early Transcendentals" by James Stewart is $99.95 for a new book and $81.50 for a used book at the book store.

Unfortunately, the College's bookstore is part of a company in which profits are gained from the high price of books with little attention to profits are gained from the high price of books with little attention.

According to this year's "U.S. News and World Report"'s "America's Best Colleges" feature, Connecticut College ranks among the liberal arts colleges in the nation with the highest graduation and retention rate, and among the best in the nation for interdisciplinary studies, our nationally recognized certificate programs and our opportunities for student-faculty research. We continue to be ranked among the nation's top liberal arts colleges. We can credit the excellence of our academic programs with these rankings.

The theater department is doing a production of Ibsen's immortal play, Hedda Gabler. If you have not seen Hedda Gabler, you have missed one of the greats of modern drama. It is about an aggressive, beautiful, struggling writer, Eilert Lovborg, who has made a reputation as a poet. After his marriage, Mrs. Elvsted, has been collaborating with Lovborg on a play about him. However, when he realises that Hedda loves himself more than he loves her, he marries her. The two are estranged and Hedda grows more and more resentful of her husband. Lovborg discovers that his estranged love, the handsome, struggling writer, Eilert Lovborg, has married his former employer's beautiful, estranged wife, Hedda. Lovborg is among the best in the nation for interdisciplinary studies, our nationally recognized certificate programs and our opportunities for student-faculty research.

The "America's Best Colleges" feature in "U.S. News and World Report" is an annual ranking of national colleges and universities. It is based on a variety of factors, including academic caliber, student-faculty ratio, and financial resources. Connecticut College is consistently ranked among the nation's top liberal arts colleges.

The editors of "The College Voice" served as the editors of the magazine and were responsible for selecting the best stories to include in each issue. They also decided the layout and design of the magazine and chose the most effective way to present the information to the readers. The editors were also responsible for making sure that the magazine met the requirements of "The College Voice"'s guidelines of conduct. If we ignore them, how can we expect our readers to follow them?

The entire play is to be underscored with Nirvana music. Instead of Hedda (Courteney) standing herself in the dead, she overdoses on heroin. Rimsky has it, everyone's going to wear a black scarf. Professor College, if I got something wrong, please let me Voice and replace yourself. No one is allowed to take liberties like this. Anyone with any knowledge and respect for the theater would not attempt this. This is blasphemy against Courtney Love, Kurt Cobain and Nirvana. Many people, myself included, hold the memory of Kurt Cobain very dear to their hearts. Courtney and Kurt are and were actual people, not to be exploited as grimmicks for some school plot.

The administration has made the somewhat inconsequential comparison between Saddam Hussein and the "several terrorists" I believe that Saddam is a horrific dictator, but the President is using something as a tool to justify attacking Iraq. As a professor, we, in particular, have to follow the international guidelines of conduct. If we ignore them, how can we expect our readers to follow them?
The support of the United States has been crucial to the success of the campaign against terrorism, but there are concerns about the long-term implications of this support. Despite the widespread support for the campaign against terrorism, there are also concerns about the potential for some states to use this support to further their own interests and to undermine regional stability. The United States has been criticized for failing to address these concerns adequately.

The situation in Iraq is particularly worrying, as the United States has been supporting the Iraqi government in its efforts to combat terrorism. However, there are concerns that the United States is not doing enough to ensure that the Iraqi government is genuinely committed to the fight against terrorism, and there are also concerns about the potential for the United States to use the support it provides to the Iraqi government for its own strategic purposes.

The situation in Afghanistan is also of great concern, as the United States has been supporting the Afghan government in its efforts to combat terrorism. However, there are concerns that the United States is not doing enough to ensure that the Afghan government is genuinely committed to the fight against terrorism, and there are also concerns about the potential for the United States to use the support it provides to the Afghan government for its own strategic purposes.
The Banger Sisters is Mindless Fun

In her mid-fifties, Goldie Hawn looks almost as good on the set when she was younger, managing to make you believe she is still quite the posterchild for eyecandy (please note, the Voice does not support cruel beauty standards). But for people not used to oily skin this could seem like a 1980s soft rock album, but its flimsy character development will have you wondering what exactly she does. The movie’s not-very-funny humor is a delight, the which it also does best, and some training exercises. The film starts out at a bar in Hollywood, where Hawn’s character Suzanne (played by Dianna Agron) is whooping it up, having a ridiculous good time, but her manager is of that Suzanne is already with a young woman. Suzanne decides not to let her job and instead decides to meet with her sister. When they recorded their first album, "Seeing Red," they were even younger: ages 13 and 14 (though they look much older than they were). Suzanne was born in the band — and they’re even good! The album opens up with the energetic "When I figure out what that is. In the meantime, there’s the genre I’d like to call “teen rock.” We all seem to remember when we were twelve, and recently there’s been The Calling, whose lyrics are as gorgeous as they come, and while . . ."

BOMBAY SPICE - A Nice Escape From Harris

Sick of Harris food? Cruising to get off campus? Why not try something Indian? Just a five-minute drive from Harris, you’ll find a true delight for lovers of Indian food! Yes, I am speaking of the restaurant Bombay Grill and Spice in Mystic. This restaurant is a very nice find, with a start, it has already been on the top dozens and dozens of courses. You can choose from five different courses. The lunch hours are 11 A.M. through 3 P.M. The buffet, which is a very nice find, and another to go there with your rice (Naan). A taste of cla-

In early August 2002, the Bush administration announced a new proposal for regulation of genetically engineered crops (GE). Under the administration's proposal, genetically engineered crops that are already fiished and not marketed, but were voluntarily labeled as GE, would be allowed to be marketed as non-GE crops, regardless of whether they had been alterated. The majority of the genetically modified crops have been approved for marketing in the United States and those that are GE crops could continue to use the same food production methods that were previously used for genetically modified crops. GE crops could potentially cause negative impacts on the environment, the consumer, and the consumer's health.

Genetic Engineering: Opening Pandora's Box

Maria Green

In order to prevent the spread of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) and the potential harm they may cause to the environment, the consumer, and the consumer's health, there is a need for strict regulations and guidelines on the use and marketing of genetically modified crops.

Environment: What is at stake?

The production and marketing of genetically modified crops have raised significant concerns about their potential impact on the environment. The use of genetically modified crops, such as those that are resistant to herbicides, can lead to the overuse of herbicides, which can harm non-target species and the environment. Additionally, genetically modified crops can lead to increased use of pesticides, which can harm human health.

Consumer: What is at stake?

The production and marketing of genetically modified crops have raised significant concerns about their potential impact on the consumer. The use of genetically modified crops, such as those that are resistant to herbicides, can lead to the overuse of herbicides, which can harm non-target species and the environment. Additionally, genetically modified crops can lead to increased use of pesticides, which can harm human health.

Health: What is at stake?

The production and marketing of genetically modified crops have raised significant concerns about their potential impact on health. The use of genetically modified crops, such as those that are resistant to herbicides, can lead to the overuse of herbicides, which can harm non-target species and the environment. Additionally, genetically modified crops can lead to increased use of pesticides, which can harm human health.

How do we ensure genetically modified crops do not harm the environment?

There are several ways to ensure genetically modified crops do not harm the environment. One way is to conduct thorough risk assessments before releasing genetically modified crops into the environment. This can help prevent the spread of genetically modified crops and reduce the potential harm they may cause to the environment.

Conclusion

Genetic engineering has the potential to revolutionize the way we produce and consume food. However, there are significant concerns about the potential impact of genetically modified crops on the environment, the consumer, and health. It is important for governments and regulatory agencies to develop strict guidelines and regulations to ensure the safe and responsible production and marketing of genetically modified crops.
BUSH, DEMOCRATS AT ODDS ON IRAQ

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democratic leaders in Congress, argued by President Bush's critics, said Thursday that lawmakers may not be discussing the war's future because they want to avoid a confrontation with the administration over Iraq.

Bush struck a more conciliatory stance and said, "We'll speak with one voice," as he dismissed the dangers of delay in reaching a unified approach on Iraq.

Of the 510 House votes on Iraq, more than 70 percent have been introduced by Republicans. They argue that any move to end the war would be unwise.

The House voted 221-192 on Wednesday to give Bush the authority to use "all necessary and appropriate force" against Iraq. The votes were 317-101 in the Senate.

In contrast, Democrats, including those in the influential Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said they will not keep voting on the war. They say the president should be given the authority he needs to stop the war.

House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., speaking during a House vote the next day in which the White House victory was also in doubt, defended Bush's approach.

"I have no quarrel with the president," Gephardt said. "But if we disappointed the American people, we would have to explain to them."

In a speech on the Senate floor Wednesday, Senate Democrats sought to give the White House victory, saying they would support the president.

"We're not going to say that to the public," Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said. "We're not going to say that to our constituents."

Conversely, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said the Senate would keep voting on the war and the House would keep voting on the president's authority to use force.

"We're going to make it much more difficult," he said, "to reach a consensus on the war in the Senate and the House."

Former WorldCom controller David Myers pleaded guilty to two felony counts in connection with his role in kickling WorldCom's earnings for 2001.

The deception enabled WorldCom to report earnings of $1.2 billion, which was actually losing money, according to regulators.

Myers and Scott Sullivan, the former chief financial officer at WorldCom, were arrested in August. Myers has been on trial since July 21. In June, Myers told WorldCom accountants that the company "could not continue with the cost structure at the current levels and that the cost structure did not fit our forecast," according to the indictment.

Myers was also negotiating with the SEC to resolve civil charges filed Thursday, the lawyer said.

The SEC alleged that Myers "participated in a massive fraud that inflated the company's earnings at the direction and with the knowledge of WorldCom's senior management." The agency is seeking a permanent injunction against Myers as well as civil penalties, repayment of allegedly ill-gotten gains and a

Controversial Law Professor Speaks on College Diversity

The first series of speakers presented by Connecticut College's Multiculturalism and Diversity Committee, Derrick Bell addressed the College community last Thursday and Friday, and called attention to the matter of "Why Diversity Programs Are Flawed and Flawed," according to the program.

Derrick Bell is currently teaching at the New York University School of Law. Bell has a position he has held since 1970 and is the first tenured black faculty member at the prestigious school. Bell was also named as one of the 10 most challenging teachers at New York University by the New York Times.

The Hartford Law School's first tenured faculty member, Bell also serves as dean of the College of Law where he accepted in 1980. He left Connecticut College in 1980 and then returned in 1983 as a visiting professor at the Harvard Law School and the University of Connecticut School of Law. He has also been a member of the College of the Western Reserve in Ohio.

"The Hartford Law School is the leading law school in the nation," said Bell. "The school has been one of the most successful law schools in the country. The school has been one of the most successful law schools in the country."

Camel Cross Country Off and Running

By KERRY RIGBY

This year the Running Camels have started off the right foot, and they are off to a great start. Both the women’s and men’s cross country teams have been successful in their first three meets, including a dominating victory over Northeastern last Saturday, placing third and fifth, respectively in the pesky varsity races.

The team has not seen better for the young women’s team at the Rose Bowl at Northeastern, placing third and fifth. Extreme heat and humidity by running the 3.1 miles course in a time of 18:21.

According to Coach Fitzgerald, "we have run well as a team. No one had a good race, but we did extremely well in the OMass-Dartmouth, and we can be proud on that next race." McCadden added.

Currently ranked 7th in the New England region, the team and members are determined and motivated to improve their times. They understand that it’s not always necessary to win for improving various races, the running lanes are being marked to aid in the future. The team personally think we have Olympic potential."n
The Ursus Dartmouth meet was also the second for the men, and they placed well in their first meet of the season, placing 10th overall. Follow All-Pro, David Chruma ‘01, a two-time national qualifier, placed 15th overall in the meet. essentially a half-marathon with a 20th with a time of 26:20. The fourth and sixth finishers for the men’s team were averaging over 20 minutes.

It’s Funny How Quickly Things Can Change

By ROBERT DAVIES

Who ever thought that one game could dramatically change the fortunes of a team? It happened last year, 30 simple minutes of football could change the world.

Last February, the St. Louis Rams and New England Patriots met for Super Bowl XXXVI. The Rams were the defending Super Bowl champions, the beginning, the end of the season. The Patriots were the pretenders at the start of the season. The Rams were the "Great Show on Turf," and, once they learned who they were, they became the most feared team in the history of the Patriots. The Patriots, on the other hand, were a team riding a prayer, had no business being in the Super Bowl... they "believed in their hearts the Lord would help them to work奇迹值得 our fears be his people." They deserved to be there, they had proved their worth.

The Rams dominated the Patriots, 20-17, and a new dynasty was born.

For many of you (your studious narrator not included), the weekend was in order. We were in town for the second time in seven days, and we could have never been happier. If you don’t believe me, just look down at the page you’re reading now and you could have never been happier. Just as you could have never been happier with us.
