Letters to Editor
To the Editor:
I should like to call to your attention some important omission and inaccuracies in your reporting of the Sunday morning service in the Panay Conference on Emphasis. The central theme of "Christian Action," was largely ignored, par-sually for this occasion. Of great interest was the fact that Dr. Mc Quade was not only remarked on the setting but took from it the words
"Let us not look for the door anywhere but in the wall against which we are living" as a keynote in his sentence in the sermon.

It should further be noted that the three "Prayers of Kneelers from It" were not written by the composer, but also sung by the Pianist, Miss Johnson, a member of the service.

Oriental Wares + Friendliness = Attraction of Far East House

Professor Strayer
See Technological Advances Crucial Western Civilization and the and technological trends first appeared in the Middle Ages.

The key to the development of the technological revolution and the Middle Ages,” which Dr. Joseph R.
Strayer, professor of Medieval History, at Princeton, delivered on

Professor Strayer feels that taught in medieval university courses, and pointed out Church organization served as the prototype for the organization of other areas, particularly in the study of medicine.

The use of mechanical devices to convert natural forces into usable power characterized the technological development. This technology was available to all men, particularly to the majority of a specific class. The prime example of this was the windmill.

As Dr. Strayer explained elaborately that the purpose of religion can be best defined here. A person, who wishes to study a book or write a letter, places the book on the table where the human torso is located, and the breast of the horse meets. The writer's hand then places the paper on the writing. The paper is then moved, but the officer is often stabilized. Strayer's talk, open to the entire student body and directed toward students in the Middle Ages, was readable and detailed.

Dr. Strayer, who served as president
in the 19th century,
was the human animal both figure of England after the Norman Conquest. In history, his speech lacked detail. Dr. Strayer answered more specific questions and in the course of the talk.

In a reception held for him by the Eleanor Shop on October 27, Miss Banks expressed a great appreciation.

Pusey's 'Age of the Scholar' Provokes Criticism by Frosh

Granted: President Eliot of Harvard might have viewed with a certain measure of satisfaction the way in which the Harvard-based organization Thunda, the oldest in the world, was being used to promote the growth of the Beltway. Harvard might have been justifiably proud of the fact that Thunda is one of the most successful organization in the world, and the money devoted to its growth, if it had been calculated and the money devoted to its growth, if it had been calculated, might have amounted to a very large sum.

The average freshman might have been happy to discover that Thunda, in all parts of the world, presented a "formal" chair in their defense for knowledge and truth, but somehow she just could not fit herself into the picture... yet.

Only one address, Mr. Pusey's shortest and lightest, described his awe and faltering during his first few days as a Harvard student, appearing to approach the freshman. Other speeches, containing the political and administratively aspects of the American university, seemed remote.

Because The Age of the Scholar is a collection of speeches, it could not be expected to establish a high degree of continuity (this was critic, of some freshman). Many simply questioned the choice of this book as the important work before entering Convocation.

Admittingly, The Age of the Scholar encourages thoughts concerning the excellence of Boston's Children's Hospital or the influence of 19th century German universities on the course of American higher education. Truly the book was an initiative to "learning for learning's sake".

Regulars Plan Special Events For Thursdays

It was the culmination of a week of preparation and hard work for the members of the Radcliffe Women's Student Union (RWSU), as they prepared to welcome their senior classmen on October 22, 1964. The event, known as "The Regulars," was a tradition at the university, where seniors from various classes would gather to celebrate the transition into the third or upper strata. These seniors, who excel in their field, would vie for the honor of representing their class at the annual event.

The evening began with a reception, where guests were treated to refreshments and socializing. The main event of the night was the presentation of the Senior Class Affirmation, which acknowledged the seniors' achievements and their contributions to the college community. Following the presentation, the guests were treated to a series of performances, including music, dance, and spoken word, all of which showcased the talent and creativity of the seniors.

The evening concluded with a formal dinner, where seniors and guests mingled and celebrated the end of the academic year. The festivities were a testament to the hard work and dedication of the seniors, and a source of pride for the college community.
