David Cobb, Third Party Presidential Candidate, to Give On-Campus Lecture on Friday

By Maureen Rogers

David Cobb, the presidential candidate running for the Green Party, will be appearing at Connecticut College this Friday in the Emilio Cronin Room at 10:30 AM. He is a co-founder of CCELR and the New London Green Party.

Cobb’s platform is very true to the policies of the Green Party. With regards to foreign policy, he wishes to withdraw all American troops from Iraq immediately. As a result of this move, Cobb promises that there will be no draft. Currently, Cobb claims that “it defies logic to believe that the government will not attempt to revive conscription, which is an illegal practice that has caused so much political and social turmoil in the past.”

Debate rules would also be revised so that any candidate not participating in a minimum of ten debates would lose the right to run. Many experts have pointed to the “electoral college” as a key feature of the current system. According to Cobb, this method of electing a president is undemocratic in the sense that the candidate who wins the election may not have the support of the majority of the electorate. Cobb claims, “The electoral college was an idea that was born because of the unrepresented majority of citizens.”

Currently, Cobb is running third in the polls behind Kerry and Bush. Cobb “believes that America must remove their military power from Iraq inorder to avoid a draft.”

Domestically, Cobb has many policies that he believes he can implement. In the regal of his goal is the protection of healthcare. He also wishes to improve public education by making some monetary responsibility from the local level to the state level in order to ensure equal education for all Americans. Other domestic changes he wishes to make include a higher minimum wage, a tax increase on veterans, and the legalization of medical marijuana.

Sandy Grande, Assistant Professor of Education, named Multicultural Faculty of the Year

By Elizabeth Garcia

Multicultural Education’s Sandy Grande, Assistant Professor of Education was awarded the National Association of Multicultural Educators’ (NAME) Connecticut Chapter’s ‘Higher Education Multicultural Faculty of the Year’ NAME is a scholarly association in the field of education, such that Professor Grande does not belong.

According to accepting the title, Grande stated that she was experiencing a “Moment of Instruction” at moving diversity initiatives forward, so it was nice for [her] work to be recognized.

Although many professors perhaps become interested in their profession because of inspirational teachers they had in the past, Professor Grande is an exception. As a product of the Hartford public school system, she realized from a young age that not all schools were created equal. The experience of being bused between suburban and urban schools gave her the inspiration that in places where there was diversity, there were no resources. “In others with no diversity, there was no diversity.”

Reflecting back, Professor Grande commented that “There was no place to feel comfortable, no place to get a quality education.” This issue of inability to change his environment, along with the “difficulty of being young” fostered an immensely as a student, an experience that has affected her throughout her teaching perspective. Becoming a professor to Grande means addressing two main areas: the educational system and the lack of diversity.

Professor Grande’s ethnic heritage is Quiche Native American and she said that the title has given her a sense of belonging to a group of students that has been “socially and politically marginalized.” Because it provides her with a particular point of view that is very persistent to her multiculturalism work.

Previously a professor at Colby College, Grande decided to come to Conn in 2000 because it was like “coming home again” so her native student. Additionally, the Multicultural Diversity Committee struck her as a key feature of the college, one that “signaled that the institution has a level of commitment to diversifying the local level to the state level in order to ensure equal education for all students.”

CC Dems Promote Kerry in Pennsylvania

By Thomas McGuire

The Connecticut College Democrats organized a trip to Pennsylvania on October 24 through the League of Conservation Voters, a nonpartisan, environmental organization that endorses John Kerry.

The trip was not only intended for Conn students to spread support for the Democratic Presidential nominee in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, an important swing district in this year’s presidential race, but also to get them excited and active in the upcoming election. Most of the students who participated were not active members of the student body.

Nearly fifty students went door-to-door in areas of Montgomery County, staging more than 2,900 fliers, according to Matthew Limo, Vice President of CC Democrats. “We tried to persuade undecided voters that John Kerry is best suited to be the next president.”

Limo also noted that this particular trip followed solely on the presidential race, not intramural. “So CC Democrats have been working in the congressional race here in New London.”

“A lot of our members [have been] working on Sen. Pell’s campaign in various capacities,” Limo added.

Pennsylvania was chosen in the place for the students’ efforts because of the crucial role it is playing in this year’s presidential election. While 71 electoral votes, winning Pennsylvania has been a top priority for both candidates. Both states the same amount of votes, but Pennsylvania has more than twice as many voters.

Democrats also have more than twice as many registered voters, but voters also outnumber Democrats voting in the state. The CC Democrats have more than ten times as many members as the Republicans in the state. They operate as a branch of the Democratic National Committee (DNC) and work closely with the DNC in Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania College Democrats is one of the largest in the country, with more than one hundred active members across all campus clubs to join the campaign. (Thomas)

Here in the United States of America, we pride ourselves on our free and fair elections. But what if you don’t support George W. Bush in this election? Would you vote for John Kerry or vote third-party to express your dissatisfaction with either candidate? Is it wrong to vote third-party? The answer is no.

At the moment, the Supreme Court is considering two cases concerning the Texas and New Mexico elections. If the Court rules in favor of either case, it could have a significant impact on the election outcome.

On the Texas case, Estados Unidos v. Perry, the Court is considering whether the state’s redistricting plan violated the federal Voting Rights Act. The plan was challenged by five Latino voters who claimed that the plan was designed to dilute their voting power.

In the New Mexico case, New Mexico v. United States, the Court will decide whether the state’s redistricting plan violated the Voting Rights Act. The plan was challenged by two Latino voters who claimed that the plan was designed to dilute their voting power.

The Court’s decision in these cases could influence the outcome of the election. However, it is important to remember that the election is still weeks away, and the outcome of these cases may not be known until after the election.

The United States of America is a country deeply divided on political issues. It is essential that we as citizens understand the importance of voting and the impact that each vote can have on the outcome of the election.

In the end, it is the responsibility of each individual to vote in an informed manner, and to support the candidate who best represents their values and beliefs.

The election is on November 2, 2004, and I encourage each and every person to vote and make their voice heard.

As a journalist, I have the opportunity to write about the election and the different perspectives that people have. I have heard from people who are passionate about their candidate, and from people who are less interested in the election. But the one thing that we all have in common is the desire for a fair and free election.

I urge everyone to vote on November 2, and to make your voice heard in the decision-making process of our country. The future of our nation depends on it.

WHY BUSH IS BETTER FOR JEWISH SUPPORTERS OF ISRAEL

BY YEHUDA ROSEN

"If a President Bush is a greater friend of Israel and if a President Kerry is not..."

The recent events in the Middle East, particularly the debate over the status of Jerusalem, have raised concerns among Jewish voters about the suitability of the candidates. Many Jewish voters are concerned about the potential impact of a Kerry presidency on Israel.

John Kerry, as a Democrat, has been a consistent advocate for a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. However, some Jewish voters worry that a Kerry presidency could be detrimental to Israel's interests.

George W. Bush, on the other hand, has been a strong supporter of Israel and has consistently advocated for the defense of Israel's security. Many Jewish voters believe that Bush is better equipped to handle the complexities of the Middle East.

However, it is important to note that the candidates' stances on Israel are not the sole determining factor in a Jewish voter's decision. Other factors, such as the candidates' positions on social and economic issues, are also important.

In the end, the decision to vote for either candidate is a personal one. It is up to the individual voter to decide which candidate they believe will best represent their values.

Laziness Meets Love in Monkey
By KRISTIN HOCEVAR

This isn't to say that every piece in the preview was tasteful and delicate. Since it was the first show of the season, the artists managed to throw in a few surprises that can sometimes scare off people with little exposure to contemporary dance. The art, of course, takes you along Elsa's mission (to bring this "trinity" together), and intriguingly, we also are introduced to a new "Singleton" as he refers to them, and the supposed avant-garde additions of running, dramatic music, and the unpredictable connections between their dancers. These connections, which are revealed through movements of grabbing, lifting, and partnering, illustrate the close-knit relationship of Elsa's dancers carried on throughout the performance.

At first glance, the style was blend of both modern and traditional dance. The piece begins with an extended opening of a woman in a white wedding dress walking in a circle, followed by a series of images of angels descending from above. The dancers in white gowns and golden shoes appear ethereal, creating a sense of otherworldliness and tranquility.

However, this peaceful atmosphere is disrupted when a man in a black suit enters the stage. He begins to dance frenziedly, moving in a way that seems almost possessive. The other dancers, initially passive, begin to mirror his movements, creating a sense of tension and unease.

Despite the dark undertones, there is also a sense of beauty and grace throughout the performance. The dancers move with fluidity and grace, their movements flowing seamlessly from one to the next. The use of light and shadow adds depth and dimension to the performance, creating a visually stunning and emotionally powerful experience.

In conclusion, Love in Monkey is a thought-provoking and visually stunning performance that explores themes of love, loss, and redemption. It will undoubtedly leave a lasting impression on audiences, challenging them to think deeply about the nature of relationships and the complexities of human emotion.

Alcohol Awareness Week Strives to Raise Concern about Drinking

by Jennifer Martinez

The Peer Educators and the Health Promotion/Reduction (HPER) Committee sponsored National College Alcohol Awareness Week on the campus this past week. HPER is chaired by Assistant Dean of Student Life, Anne Hopkins-Gross, and is comprised of various student leaders, faculty, and staff members from various College offices, including the Director of Campus Safety, Jim Minter. The Peer Educators are students who volunteer to educate campus community about some important social issues, and it is divided into three subcommittees: Team Health and Wellness, Healthy Relationships, and Social Norms.

HPER has adopted an "environmental management approach" for educating the campus about healthy behaviors. Essentially, the method states that educators should do more than simply tell students to stop drinking. Instead they should provide non-alcoholic social outlets and create a "health promoting normative environment" which helps promote accurate perceptions of students' behaviors on campus in the hopes of changing social habits for the better.

By raising consciousness of alcohol on campus and listing discussion of drinking-related concerns through various panels and student activities, Alcohol Awareness Week aimed at addressing the first two of these issues.

Assistant Dean of Student Life, Anne Hopkins-Gross, stressed the importance of the events in light of past studies, which indicate that students abuse alcohol on college campuses. She noted, "(Alcohol Awareness Week) is not prohibition. The goal is to promote healthy behaviors on campus about alcohol.

The week-long events started with a Design and Darkness event called "Streptometh," which was hosted by the Trauma Health and Wellness committee. The discussion addressed the notice of affairs being heavy drinkers.

On Tuesday evening the Peer Educators sponsored "Alcohol Truth Campus Alcohol Use, Binge Goggles," a talk focusing on the actual pervasiveness of alcohol on the College campuses.

A panel on sexual assault occurred Wednesday and was hosted by the Health Awareness committee.

Another student event sponsored by HPER in conjunction with Deering was the "Moonlight Breakfast," which took place the evening of October 28.

The event was intended to provide a non-horizontal social outlet on a Thursday slide. In addition to providing a breakfast menu from 10:00-12:00am, the event hosted a performance by the Shwiffs, various raffle items, and prizes.

Every morning of the week, the committee will team up with the Student Activities Council (SAC) on Friday, October 29 to sponsor "Fridays Night Line" and "Mocktails," which will provide another non-horizontal social outlet on a Friday slide. Dean Hopkins-Gross gave recommendations for the future in terms of the week's events and those involved. She noted that the Peer Educator program should be expanded next year.

Sandy Grande named Multicultural Faculty of Year meeting is on November 17th at 3:30 in the 1941 room.

Grande has had a work externship in the department as currently "relevant to her work as a scholar." Although Grande values all three key positions as "equally important," lately she notes that it has been "total insarctasy and a lot of work" keeping up with all the jobs she has. These multiple positions have enabled her to develop initiatives at the College, such as the Healthy Relationships, and Social Norms, and how actions America takes against terrorists need to be approved by the world. America, like Israel, has the right to go after its enemies no matter how America perceives them. Focusing on America's economic success is just as important as America's social success. To support a candidate who will raise your taxes, then support a candidate who will raise your taxes at the same rate and at the same time is trying to integrate multicultural education into the curriculum.

Grande strongly believes that "driving home the idea of diversity in the learning environment enhances the learning experience of all students," focusing on many perspectives, as possible enhances student levels of achievement, and benefits [students] in so many levels," Grande noted.

In regards to the struggle for creating a multicultural campus, Grande said, "It's a tough road, but we're on the precipice of being on the cutting edge of liberal arts colleges." As evidence, "the signature features," such as the proposed Center for the Comparative Study of Race and Ethnicity and the hiring of a special officer for Senior Diversity.

already shown, less than 90% of Democrats are sympathetic to Israel. The Democratic Party has very little pro-Israel pressure groups, but they do have international left-wing groups like the one led by Dean and Gore and others that what it means is that America is in the spotlight it is because of its relationship with Israel. Anti-Israel, radical leftists on the Kerry side are stronger in numbers and influence. Examples include Kerry changing from being pro-peace to war against it. Kerry makes remarks against Israeli settlements. Kerry wanting to use Camp David to the Middle East, and others. Many of those things are opposed by the radical leftists. Kerry has the support of the Democratic voting base.

Don't get me wrong, the Republican Party has its own anti-Israel faction as well; but they are merely on the fringe and do not even want to support any power or influence over their party leader.

Finally, Jewish supporters of Israel need to think about America as they do about Israel; American Jews will not stand to the EU, getting re-accreditation by the state and at the same time is trying to integrate multicultural education into the curriculum.

Grande strongly believes that "driving home the idea of diversity in the learning environment enhances the learning experience of all students," focusing on many perspectives, as possible enhances student levels of achievement, and benefits [students] in so many levels," Grande noted.

The End Of An Era

As I sit down to write this column on Wednesday, not long before the final whistle blows on the first College World Series, I couldn’t decide whether or not to continue it. There are some of the biggest certainties in all of sports, that the Red Sox can’t win it and the Bruins can’t bring the Stanley Cup to Boston. But the most incredible thing, I figured, was when the past and the present does not meld, by bringing the Yankees and the Patriots onto the same stage, so there must be bigger news. Some people do that to us, but I’ll try to keep the focus on the big picture, and hope to write a lot about the last hours of the Red Sox, the coming of the Patriots and the beginning of the Bruins. It’s a time to think about the things that are sure, the facts that we can be just as sure about as sure as the Red Sox winning the World Series. In a way, this is just as sure as sure can be, as Sunday night’s game. But before we talk about the Red Sox, let’s talk about basketball.

The Boston Celtics had a good start to the season, opening up with a 92-87 record, then dropped to 10-9 before getting to the final four. (Drew O’Brien)

The last few weeks have been a mix of excitement and disappointment for the Boston Celtics. After a strong start to the season, they fell behind their competition, falling to the Cleveland Cavaliers in the Eastern Conference finals. Despite their disappointment, they remain one of the most exciting teams in the NBA.
