She was made aware of this tendency in America by the central problem which she saw in Turkey, and because America plays an important role in Turkish life, President Park believes it is important to inform the young people of today. Thus, the assembly was held in a Turkish university which will be felt in other countries. Many Americans are superficially aware of Turkey in regarding some of the historic aspects, Miss Park said.

Miss Wright CC Friend Tells Of Earlier Rec Hall Drive

by Sue Adler

At 7 Northridge Road, just north of Connecticut College, lives a woman who knows more about the college than almost any other person today. This woman, who has been so influential and active in the college's history, is Miss Elizabeth Wright, one of the founders, secretary, registrar, bursar, and bookkeeper of the University.

Miss Wright's home is filled with memories of the college since its founding in 1912. She has vivid recollections of the amazing growth the college has made in its relatively short existence.

Miss Wright is a lover of young people and likes to help them as much as she can. The Foe of Circumstances, written by Miss Wright, is a fictional account of an intelligent young man confronted with problems because he was not as wealthy as some of his college contemporaries. Through my life, I have noticed that able intelligent people are often put down because of their financial status.

Conn. Nearly Had a Rec Hall

Connecticut students are vitally interested in raising enough money to build a Rec Hall. Did you know that Connecticut nearly had such a building in 1913? During the campaign for funds for Windham House, one of the first buildings on campus, Edward Higgins, in a letter to the editor, made a suggestion. He was interested in giving to the college a building for recreational purposes. Mr. Knowlton immediately asked the administrators of the college to accept a site for his building, and he would choose another professor to build it. He also suggested a library be built.

It seems difficult to believe that students would steal books from the library. Connecticut College is fortunate in having a beautiful Lock and Key Library.

Wedding Chimes Bring Happy Times to Conn. College Gang

Phyllis Cahulow '55

Phyllis met Steven Yates on a blind date at home in June after her return from a trip to New York. Since Phyllis is a history major, they have no trouble remembering one date: October 26. It was that date, over four weeks ago, that they became engaged on the anniversary of their first year of being plated.

Pat Grossman

Pat Grossman and Lt. Stanton Hearne '53 were engaged on October 18. Stark has a year at Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. Pat has applied for a job in the military, and they both will enjoy the time until they can marry.

2. The details of the news are certainly unusual. It all started on Tuesday evening when Sue Meek (joined the conversation between Bert Franchel and Marley Koby involving Aldo Ray. She learned that the movie star with the greatest interest in service work, "Aide Ray," was scheduled for a personal appearance at the Garde Theatre on Thursday to sign autographs. Someone suggested inviting him to dine, but he was soon dropped as the group disbanded. Aldo Ray was on an odd way of recurring, and at lunch on Friday morning he, "Aide Ray" again came up. This time, however,

Federal Service Examinations to Be Given in December; Application Forms Available

The first Federal Service Examination opened October 17 to college seniors and college graduates who want a career in the Federal service. Applicants may file for the first written test to be held in December through any of the 5,000 appointment offices will be given full information concerning the representatives' visit. Interested students should contact their offices.

Mr. Young emphasized that any senior passing the examination can be hired as soon as he or she meets the requirements. In February or June, provided he has come within reach of agency so that his name now is among those of eligibles. This means his name must be on the list of eligibles in the name of the highest classification in which he can meet the requirements. Any eligible in the Federal Service who has completed the list may be called for an interview.

A student may tell a Federal agency representative, either before or after the examination, that he would like to work for that agency. Similarly, an agency representative may, at either time, ask a student to consider an appointment only with that agency.

Those taking the examination will be given an opportunity to specialize in a particular area or for general ability. Such appointments can be made once the examination, graduation, and a number of oral tests for selection are completed.

The new Federal Service Examinations will be given on the first day of December to college students, persons who will have passed the examination in a particular area or for general ability, or who will have passed the examination, graduation, and a number of oral tests for selection are completed.

Writing Examinations

Written Examinations will be given a 3-hour written examination on December 12. Those wishing to try for management internships will have an oral interview before the written test is held. Those trying for management internships will have an oral interview before the written test is held.

Those who have tried out before may do so again. At the time of the examination, the written examination will be given in full in the college placement offices or may be obtained from the nearest Commission for the examination. In the event the applicant fails the examination, he may take it again during his senior year or after graduation. Agreement is necessary with various test makers. At least at one point on the line. The highest classification in which he can meet the requirements.

Native Language Welcome

Pleases Russian Delegation

Four college girls, one of whom was a Connecticut college student, flourished good relations between the United States and Russia, while the other made the delegation to Russia.

Penelope Howland, a Sophomore in Des Moines, got together with three others from four different colleges to make a welcoming sign for the Russian delegation to Iowa last July.

After spending three and one-half hours constructing the huge black and red sign with "welcome" in Russian, written on it, the girls took it to the airport and displayed it immediately at the attention of all photographers, newspapermen and spectators. "When the plane landed, we almost ran out to greet them," Penelope declared. "The Russians, seeing the sign, were delighted to be greeted in their own language. A damper was momentarily put on the occasion by an official who corresponded to the American Department of State. "It says beg you," he said. "What are you begging?" Then he concluded that the sign meant nothing.

Evidently, however, a correspondent for Pravda in New York City, Eugene Lipton, was impressed with the gesture. The sign was "a political triumph, a political victory," according to Mr. Lipton, and "certainly unusual." The details of the news are certainly unusual.

The sign was "a political triumph, a political victory," according to Mr. Lipton, and "certainly unusual.

According to Dr. Harrington, Moscow correspondent for the New York Times, the words on the sign were very official Russian, but could be taken to mean welcome.

The next day Penelope was told that the Russians were so pleased with the sign of friendliness that they had asked that the girls be invited to the banquet being given for them by the Des Moines band and orchestra. On the following day, the girls were presented with a dozen roses, a small picture album with pictures of the states of the soviet republics in the USSR and a metal from the All-Union Agricultural Union. "It is all right, "Penelope said, "we were just happy to have given them a welcoming sign and wished the Russians good luck in their visit to Russia someday."

Mr. and Mrs. Kasem-Beg this fall, Penelope gave her impression of this international incident: "All of us feel that we have played a small part on the international scene. If small, an important one, and one which proved to our Russian and American college students—rank amateurs—could have played."
Mr. Meek became the liaison between the manager of the Garde and the girls in JA. Negotiations to invite him to resign from the majority of the Outing Club. A new class treasurer will be elected next week and fortunately hockey season is over.

Now that the "political" history of the sophomore class president has been revealed, what of the girl herself? Peggy comes from Madison, New Jersey, where she attended Kent Place School. She completed her pre-college education at Chatham Hall in Virginia. As a zoology major, Peggy can be found in her fourth floor garret in Mary. Her thesis, "Inspecting the working parts of the dog fish or some other large fish from the animal kingdom, as one might suspect from this information, her favorite object is an animal—a hippocampus, specifically speaking. Peggy’s mantle for hippocampus can readily be detected (even by the most casual observer), for her room is filled with stuffed pelagic and a multitude of pictures of this animal.

When asked about her new office, Peggy said, "I hope to continue bringing the sophomores together as a class."

Management Training Plan Is Streamlined at Radcliffe

Symposium of the changing role of women in business the Harvard Business School and Radcliffe College announced to the New England College Body Curriculum Committee. Curriculunm work is divided between ideas for several treatment positions. Members of this plan has obvious advantages, stronger and more dynamic educational policy resembles a pyramid. The student starts on a fairly broad base his sell consumer goods seem to be richness enough to be used as part of the introductory sop hom year. It does mean that often the role of women in business the Harvard-Radcliffe Program is Streamlined at Radcliffe.

The young women also have the advantage of instruction by the Harvard Business School, the case study method and other teaching techniques developed by the Business School for graduate instruction in business administration.

Revamping of the 18-year-old Management Training Program at Radcliffe is already bringing about important changes, with the Harvard School providing the faculty and determining the educational program. A study of the curriculum is now under way, and the faculty will shortly redraft it in such a manner that it seems necessary to equip young women for current job opportunities and to encourage employers to give qualified young women jobs of greater responsibility.

Stronger Educational Venture

The decision by the faculty of the Harvard Business School to join Radcliffe in sponsoring the Program is sound in making this a stronger and more dynamic educational venture," said Mr. Meek. This year 70 graduate students at 18 institutions, representing 44 undergraduate courses, are enrolled in the course program. Twenty-eight have had at least one year of full-time work experience and eleven have had five and six years of work experience.

The young women also have the advantage of instruction by the Harvard Business School, the case study method and other teaching techniques developed by the Business School for graduate instruction in business administration.

Varied Teaching Techniques

The Harvard-Radcliffe business program is presently divided between classroom study and field work assignments, the latter consisting of a period of work at unsalaried or semisalaried jobs in more than 100 cooperating firms throughout the East and Middle-
