THE ROLE OF POLITICAL PROTEST IN OUR LIVES: Activism Must Be Based on Knowledge

By JAY STEERE

It's around us all the time. From the Post Office, to soccer games, to City, to your favorite bathroom, we are constantly being reminded by information on every form of paper on how good our housing lives should be. At least, that's what they tell us.

There is nothing wrong with acting on these messages. If you pay attention to the information on all of these forms of paper, your life will be much better. You'll live longer, you'll be healthier, you'll be happier. Why not act on these messages?

"Don't sign a petition just because your friend says, "I want to do this." Why not sign a petition just because you believe in it?"

--- George B. Thomas

The current situation and have good friends, and lucky for them. But I think that I was the one.

First, let's talk about the issue. The First Amendment is the part of the Constitution that guarantees freedom of speech. It is a crucial part of our democracy, and it is something that we should be proud of. But, as with any right, there are limits to it. For example, yelling "fire!" in a crowded theater is not protected speech.

Second, let's talk about the petition. A petition is a written request for something. It is a way for people to come together and ask for something. It is a democratic tool, and it is something that we should use. But, as with any tool, there are limits to it. For example, if you file a petition to change the color of your bathroom, that petition will not be accepted.

So, the question is, how do we use our First Amendment rights to make the world a better place? The answer is, we should do it because we believe in it. If you believe in something, then you should stand up for it. If you don't believe in something, then you shouldn't be standing up for it. That's the simple answer.

--- George B. Thomas

Our Lady Peace's Happiness Brings Bliss; but Dope's Felons Brings a Miss

By CARA CUTLER

Our Lady Peace's new album, Happiness, could be considered hard rock, with some heavy metal beats balanced with light rock sounds and a strong guitar. Composed of members Raina Mabil, Micah Taran, Denny Crompton, and Jeremy Taggart, Our Lady Peace certainly has potential. It's a mix of songs that is very catchy and has a great respect for people selling out. The band is known for being one of the many analogues relating people to music. Their message is that analogues are strong, many of the lyrics are about living and loving. Regardless of the apparent lack of logic behind the lyrics, they did make me think and search for possible deeper meanings. Our Lady Peace has a very distinct image which could be compared to their songs. It's a very beautiful work of art that truly expresses the message of the band. They will be making a statement with this album. The statement basically was that the world is full of corruption, especially America. While Dope's lyrics clearly spell out their disgust for the state of the world, the band had to slip in some controversy too. In this case, the band had to slip in some controversy. The band had to slip in some controversy too. All that is clear in the songs on Dope's new album, Felons. The band's message is clear to the listeners. This is the band's way of expressing their ideas. If you are looking for music that is straight to the point and clear, this band is for you. If you are looking for music that is complex and layered, look elsewhere. In conclusion, Felons is a powerful work of art that truly expresses the message of the band. It's a very beautiful work of art that truly expresses the message of the band.
Anne’s Bistro Offers an Impressive Alternative to Mystic

By JESSE ERDHEIM

There is a reason Martin Scorsese’s “Bringing Out the Dead” is considered one of today’s premier films. The atmosphere, maintained through careful scripting and attention to detail, is very agreeable. With only about 12 tables, Anne’s Bistro, something emphasized by the play of water surrounding a fountain in the center of the seating, is intimate and comfortable. The candle and flower display on each table led to an overall impression that the restaurant was clean and organized. With a long menu, prices are high for the dishes and any wine. Although the service was good, one might expect better given the price. The atmosphere, maintained through attention to detail, is very agreeable. Speaker Emphasizes Role Of Environment in the Future Of Cities

BY STEVE REYNOLDS

Architect Robert Geddes stressed the importance of nature in the development of cities at the keynote speech of a United Nations-sponsored national summit entitled "Urban Environments in the Next Millennium: Economy, Ecology and Equity." Geddes began speaking at 7:30 p.m. Monday night at the Olin Science Center.

Before Geddes began speaking, Ronald F. Lucas, director of the Arts at Connecticut College, an organization which sponsors a wide range of environmental activities, gave a brief remarks concerning the negative effects cities have on both our health and the environment.

Following this introduction, Geddes made his way to the podium and delivered an interesting, informative lecture concerning the role the environment has played in the development of America's urban centers.

"In the next part of the discussion, Geddes addressed the role in which nature affects economic development. For example, Lucas, here to easy for Geddes to explain in the calm, serene setting. The carving artists were both environmentalists, such as rocks and rivers.

The importance of nature was further complemented with scientific evidence. There were nine major categories of nature: forests, grasslands and others. According to Geddes, the studies have shown that "civilizations thrive where the forests and grasslands interact."

The forests were the first to be addressed. Geddes explained that the forests were "the world's land, the water's play. Architecture has been influenced by the importance of the forest edge. Inhabitants of nature such as the traveler, the explorer, the tourist are more likely to be fulfilled in urban development. The keynote speaker, the column in the front are representative of a forest edge, and the column within is similar to a forest clearing. The vertical and horizontal edges are so alike that they are almost indistinguishable."

Following the speech, there was an appreciation session for Geddes which was a wide variety of students, faculty and alumni. Geddes also informed the audience of the importance of preserving the forests and edges of cities. Geddes talked of how there were many different parts of any city that need to be successfully balanced: economy, environment and equity. This balance can occur only when architects and urban planners, the community and the different levels of government are able to coordinate their efforts. Geddes went on to show that since the academy and the public for Geddes' next assignment, he will serve as the Director for the Foreign Language.

For Richards' next assignment, he will be assigned to a special United Nations General Assembly meetings on world cities in 2001.
