DEAN BROWN OF YALE TO SPEAK AT CONVOCATION.

Tuesday, December the eighth, at Convocation, Charles Reynolds Brown, Dean of the School of Religion of Yale University, will address the student body. His subject is "The Trivial and the Vital in Religion."

By Dr. Brown has written the heads of American institutions desiring to start up in Chicago a "Stuart University," which will secure for it the curfew rings at 9:30.

Several Universities have blue Sundays at Iowa, Sunday dancing is a misdemeanor. At Purdue both dancing and card playing are tabooed in co-ed homes.

YALE TO BUILD THEATRE.

Plans for the new million dollar Gothic building to house Yale Universitv's students are now under way, says the Yale Professor George P. Baker, late of Harvard, where he conducted the widely known "47 Workshop," outlined the specifications of the building that will house his drama department. An announcement from the University office predicts that the projected theatre will be "the most completely and adequately equipped laboratory in existence for play writing and play producing."

In addition to the theatre proper the building will contain lecture rooms, one with a seating capacity of several dollars for the making of scenery and costumes; rehearsal rooms, so that several plays or acts may be in rehearsal simultaneously; a green room for the actors and working force of the theatre.

Even as well as for the generous care and education of these orphans.

Fixed fees will support a plan for a month. Money may be sent to national headquarters, Near East Relief, 15 Fifth Avenue, that Golden Rule literature and further information may be obtained.

THE AUDIENCE ALWAYS APPLAUDS.

There has recently been a discussion in one of the Music Appreciation Classes of the College, which audience applauded concert performances. After each number on the program the entire audience applauded vigorously, whether the piece has pleased or not. Do most of the members of an audience applaud because of true enjoyment or just to broadcast the fact that they are artistic and know a real artist when they see one? It is too often true that American audiences applaud from bad habit. They are afraid to express their own honest opinions. In Russia it used to be the custom to applaud only when dissolved, and that custom pleased or not.

Mr. Toller remam the fact that she can but try to make the intake less arduous. Testimonials might be quoted at will, but in the privacy of its position, the school of health which has as its purpose of educating the public in relation to tuberculosis, for the cause of moving the great while it manages at last to reach out into the homes of thousands of sufferers until knowledge regarding the rules of health percolates the entire country. Today there are 1,500 state and local tuberculosis associations scattered throughout the United States. In 1914, 14,600 public health nurses is at work in schools and homes where they help discover minor ailments which, if neglected, may result in serious illness. Clinics and dispensaries are located in every city, even traveling clinics are provided to reach the remotest country districts, with competent staffs for medical and dental service. Every

A HEALTH SCHOOL FOR MILLIONS.

By Helena Lorenz Williams.

Millions of Americans are pupils in a school of health which has as its aim the eradication of one of the world's oldest and most dangerous diseases. Through the work of this school, tuberculosis has receded to the position of third among the more important causes of death in the United States. Twenty years ago it came first, a satisfactory record, surely, for those who are devoting unceasing efforts to the cause of removing the great white plague from civilization.

This is twenty-one years ago now since a handful of earnest scientists, convinced that the disease was both preventable and curable, founded the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, for the purpose of educating the public in regard to its cause and cure. The little organization was obliged to struggle hard for existence, but it nevertheless managed to reach out into the homes of thousands of sufferers until knowledge regarding the rules of health percolates the entire country. Today there are 1,500 state and local tuberculosis associations scattered throughout the United States. In 1914, 14,600 public health nurses are at work in schools and homes where they help discover minor ailments which, if neglected, may result in serious illness. NEW INDEPENDENT JOURNALISM ARISING IN COLLEGES

A new journalism, critical, independent, is springing up in American colleges, and is expected to have a substantial effect upon the college in which it develops. The new staff of the Amherst student believes that undergraduate independence in journalism will bring faculty appointments and educational policies more in touch with the student.

"The justification," says the student, "of the new ideas of liberality in college journalism if unnecessary. . . . The college paper which sings a continuous poesis of praise or becomes an enlarged official bulletin board, can contribute little to the college welfare. It is only by arousing intelligent discussion that improvement in student conditions can be made."

The new board aims to be intelligent and interesting, without appealing to the extreme of becoming "a literary museum or a vaudeville performance." They aim to tell the truth rather than dogmatically state opinions, and to remain independent of their curriculum.—Wellesley College News.

on counting the women, and they'll come mighty near fixing the standard. The implications are clear even to those who do not know the story, and for those familiar with Volonor, every sentence is crowded with meaning.

In spite of its daring, the novel is clean in purpose and in execution, and whether a reader endorses or condemns the Volonor scheme of living, it will remain fresh in his memory long after other novels are forgotten.

EDITOR SUSPENDED FOR CRITICIZING SPEECH.

Because he criticized a chapel speech Malcolm Stevenson, managing editor of The Tripod, student publication of Trinity College (Connecticut) was suspended from college for a month.

Dean Edward Novell was the criticized speaker. He said, "Our duty in college is to disregard the individual and to build up a Trinity type." A letter to the Tripod sharply censured the Dean for this remark and called the editor to account for not denouncing this "goose stepping" policy. This aroused Stevenson to comment as follows:

"... if Dean Novell’s words correctly expressed his views, we are at a loss as to what to do. We have always thought of college as a spawning ground for individuals—for men who think. Better a radical with a heart full and a bomb than a type—a goose stepper—a man without brains enough or courage enough to declare himself.

A medical and institutional service is maintained by the National Association to furnish advice regarding the construction and establishment of hospitals, sanitariums, open air schools, clinics, preventoria, and other institutions for the tuberculosis, or for those now far physically and in danger of succumbing to the disease. Millions of copies of leaflets regarding health prescriptions are distributed by the national, state and local tuberculosis agencies. Indeed, the tuberculosis campaign has developed from one dealing strictly with that disease into the border one general health. This a subject once considered most uninteresting by the average layman is now a favorite topic for newspapers and magazines of all descriptions.

By far the greatest attention is given to the child. Correct health habits, inculcated in early youth, not only prevent childhood diseases, but develop sturdy men and women, for early training in matters of cleanliness, formation, rest and exercise are likely to be observed throughout life.

It is largely the public support of the Christmas seal sale which enables the organization to make a campaign of such dimensions possible.

This year the National Tuberculosis Association conducts its eighteenth annual Christmas seal sale. It is the aim of the organization and its affiliated bodies to make their work even stronger than heretofore so that tuberculosis may soon be at the bottom of the list of controllable and preventable diseases. Every seal that is purchased adds strength to the hands that are dealing the death blow to the enemy.
