Mr. William Alton
To Deliver Lecture On Man Unlimited

Everyone is under compulsion to develop his "deeper capacities" according to William Henry Alton of the First Church of Christ in Boston. In a lecture entitled "Man Unlimited," Alton will write the essay in which many developments of his capacities can take place through a spiritual perception of life in the past. The lecture will begin at 7:30 on Wednesday, December 9th in the main lounge of Coxe-West.

Mr. Alton is currently on tour as a member of the Board of Lectures of the Church. A graduate of Harvard University, he has managed various oil industries and a development company in North Africa and Europe, as well as the United States. More recently, he was an administrator for the Huntington, Connecticut, Historical Societies. He left this position to enter the education and religious healing practice in 1967.

Miss Marion Doro Discusses
African Political, Social Scene

In discussing political awareness with the aid of skilled psychological scientists whose regional interest in the study of politics is at African Studies, one such special interest in African affairs is Dr. Mary Doro, associate professor of government at Connecticut College.

The most memorable impression of my fifteen months at Makerere University College was the instantaneous reaction of great alacrity and grief on the part of most Afrikaners to the news of President Krüger's death," Miss Doro said as the discussion began.

"The Afrikaners were particularly impressed with the peaceful transfer of responsibility from Krüger to Johnson—the smooth continuity in government. They were horrified at Osmund's murder. One student asked me if there would be a coup d'état."

While comparing the parallel reaction of the Afrikaners to the deaths of Dag Hammarskjöld and John F. Kennedy, the student added, "I was in Kenya when Dag Hammarskjöld was killed, but the feeling was no different. The Afrikaners recognized the greatness of the two leaders and the tragedy of the individual's loss of life in both cases, but the Afrikaners were impressed by Kennedy's assassination, presenting the United Nations body which had not been invited to supervise their own. But at that time, the expression of grief was not the same.

Professor Doro, whose seven-year tenure in Africa added up to five full years, recently retired, when

Sears-Roebuck Donates $1000 To Connecticut College

Sears-Roebuck Foundation, represented by John R. Schaefer, manager of the Education Fund, has made an unrestricted grant of $1000 to Connecticut College.

In presenting the check to President Charles E. Shan, Mr. Schaefer explained that Connecticut College was one of seven colleges in the state chosen to receive grants for the year 1964. The Sears-Roebuck Foundation distributes approximately $100,000 annually in unrestricted grants to more than 400 privately supported colleges and universities throughout the country.

In addition to its grant program, the Sears-Roebuck Foundation will give approximately 50,000,000 this academic year in scholarships and other education aids, totaling nearly $3,000,000.

A Meeting of Minds

Connecticut's unexpected growth, while having some effect on the student body in the way of competition among the classes, also opens up a whole new world of possibilities for the future. We have always prided ourselves on being a "small college," small in size, but large in thought; but it seems as though the college can grow there is a very real danger that we might lose this sense of unity.

In fact, fragmentation exists now, and under present circumstances is apt to increase. Review of "Desire"

As played at a New England high school, "Desire" clearly showed among other things that the play can be effectively adapted to the modern stage. The reviewer, who knows that the play is not a usual fare for higher education, was disappointed by this decision.

The actors were apparently unprepared for the play. They spent a good part of the rehearsal time at the table with the scriptwriter's notes, and I'm told they were probably doing the same thing during the performance. They were given a chance to improve, and I'm told they took advantage of the opportunity.

I'm not thinking of Portum Y., but of the reviews that critics are saying can be so disappointing. This was a poor effort by the actors, and it was a pity they didn't have the chance to improve.

The only flaw in the play was the failure of the sets. They were probably doing the same thing during the performance. They were given a chance to improve, and I'm told they took advantage of the opportunity.

Glover Discusses Problems of New British Government

Glover discusses the problems of a Labour-Liberal coalition government, which he says will be led by James Callaghan, as well as the expected influences of countries such as China and the United States on the new government. He notes that the new government will be a strong supporter of nuclear forces, but will also work towards establishing a "wealth" tax on substances and rejecting independence.

Redwork, Inc. is one of the last vestiges of an old New York institution which was a wholesale dry goods company hurt by the depression. It is run by Robert Redwork, Jr., who was the son of the founder and had to take over when his father died in 1965. He had been in the business for 23 years before inheriting it.

The company, which had been in business for 100 years, is one of the last remaining wholesale dry goods companies in the country. It is located in the heart of Manhattan, in a building that was once home to several famous department stores.

The company is known for its high-quality fabrics, which are used by many of the top clothing manufacturers in the country. It is also known for its excellent customer service and for its commitment to quality. The company is run by a small group of people, who are dedicated to preserving the traditions of the company and to providing high-quality products to its customers.

The company is planning to celebrate its 100th anniversary next year, and it is looking for ways to mark the occasion. It is considering a number of possibilities, such as a special exhibit or a series of events that will highlight its history and its commitment to quality.
Doro

(Continued from Page One) asked about the powder keg the problems existing in various parts of the continent, that, although the problems in South Africa differed greatly from those in Eastern and Central Africa, the ultimate idea or goal of all African nations is to build up the political science department at Makerere, and to organize and facilitate British touch in Africa, and American faculty and students study at the University of Chicago for various lengths of time, depending on the amount of funds available and the students' rate of academic progress.

Originally, Makerere was under the aegis of the University of London, and the students received a University of London external degree within the traditional British three-year period. There are approximately one thousand students, mostly native, at the college, which is combined with a medical school, the oldest of its kind in East Africa. There are 130 faculty members, most of whom are Europeans. A few to 20% are Africans, however, and the administration of the university is being Africanized rapidly.

Miss Doro felt that she, as an American, was welcome and that she was treated warmly and sympathetically by the Africans. She felt that the Africans who come to the United States are anxious to return home to share their education and participate in the development of their country. She would advise students studying abroad regarding the social sciences, and although there is a growing trend toward technical advancement, Miss Doro cited two reasons for the trend: the enriched influence of the Africans who are being trained to be politicians, but now those offices are being occupied; further, the students are first being closed to receive adequate preparatory training to go into advanced technical studies. This exchange trip was Miss Doro's second trip to Africa with the Foundation.

Earlier, at a Ford Foundation Foreign Area Training Fellowship, she spent time in Kenya doing field research and gathering material for a book on political and constitutional situation of Kenya, the last-war period through its first year of independence.

Elementary School Children Learn Economics by Practice

As a college student, you may be familiar with such abstruse terms as "marginal analysis" and "operative advantage." Both are rather sophisticated economic concepts usually encountered by students in introductory economic courses—and sometimes forgotten by most of them.

Now—there is another group of American scholars familiar with these economic concepts. This group consists of thousands of elementary school children who are learning basic concepts taught in college courses.

It's all part of an exciting new program of instruction devised by Professor Lawrence Serbell, a Purdue University economist, and aimed at relieving what amounts to a major American affliction—economic ignorance. Its success In Ellkhart, Ind.; Oberlin, Ohio; Seattle; New York City and elsewhere is described by John Ford Logemann in a December Reader's Digest article, "How Children Learn the Economic Facts of Life."

Heart of the program is discovering economic concepts in everyday activities. For example, a group of grade-schoolers was assigned to keep order in the classroom, without being given specific tasks. The result was chaos—until the teacher gave individual assignments to different children: one swept the floor, another cleaned the blackboards, still another collected the trash. The work was thus quickly done; more important, the children learned the principle of division of labor.

Mass production is taught in familiar fashion. One class made gingerbread men, with each child in one group carrying out the entire process while another group set up a production line. The youngsters saw that specialization resulted in greater production, but that it also had the disadvantage of monotony and of break downs if one member of the assembly line failed to do his job.

Field trips to local businesses supplement the school-children's economic education.

Professor Serbell stated recently, "If ignorance paid dividends, most Americans could make a fortune out of what they don't know about economics." In view of this statement, it seems that more communities should be investigating Professor Serboll's program and should also be seeking ways to induce adults to follow the example of these children who are learning the economic facts of life.

Unofficial Sources Confirm Prediction of Duke's Arrival

Experts have predicted his arrival on these shores since last Epiphany. Contrary winds apparently delayed the sailing from Normandy.

King Harold expressed concern, but no alarm. "It's a rather bad blow at this time," he said. "But we will muddle through." He does not intend to resign.

A correspondent for the Chronicle reports that the Duke is recovering from a nasty spill sustained when disembarking.

The Lord High Chamberlain and the Archbishop of Canterbury have issued a joint statement, asking the people to stay at home, keep doors and windows barred, and beware of strange men.
