A new work of literature appeared in the Soviet Union this past September and immediately attracted international attention. Metropol—a collection of works by various writers—is noteworthy not only because of its unprecedented format and the quality of its content, but also because of the vehemence with which Soviet authorities banned it. Only one of the contributors to Metropol, Yuli Aleshkovsky, is now living outside of the Soviet Union. On Tuesday, Nov. 13th, Aleshkovsky came to Connecticut College to speak about this work in particular and the problem of writing in the Soviet Union in general.

Despite the fact that Aleshkovsky speaks only Russian, a fairly large group gathered in Knowlton Living Room to hear him. Helen Reeve, Chairman of the Russian Department, translated into the English language a hushed crowd, half of whom tried to understand the Russian, the other half patiently waiting for the English translation.

Aleshkovsky stressed the fact that the collection of poetry and short stories in Metropol is objectionable to Soviet authorities not for what it says about Soviet life, but for what it leaves out. According to official Soviet ideology, the role of literature is to support Soviet ideals and Communist Party ideology. There was little mention of Communist ideology in the works of Metropol. For example, in a short story, the life of young university students was described in a diary-like narrative. Their concerns as depicted by the author, were universal concerns of young people—their happiness, social lives, budding careers. There was a distinctive lack of discussion about morality, or concerns with Communist ideology.

Dissonant writing in the Soviet Union is not necessarily non-party political writing; to express oneself freely and simply without any particular political content is threatening to the authorities, who, not understanding the motivation for such work, try to read political meaning into it. Therefore, any writing which involves personal free expression becomes political and dissonant.

There was laughter when Aleshkovsky read a poem called “To Lie on the Bottom” in which the poet, obviously tired of the lack of privacy in the Soviet Union and the constant pressure from censors, talks of his longing to lie on the bottom of a submarine, emitting to no signals.

When asked how he regards those writers who choose to stay in the Soviet Union and write works which may never be published, Aleshkovsky hesitated for a long moment and then replied that he respects all writers who continue to write in an oppressive atmosphere and added ironically that “even likes some of them.”

The lecture was sponsored by the Russian department and is one in a series of Russian cultural events this semester.

On July 16th of next year, 1,993 delegates to the Republican National Convention will gather in Cobo Hall in Detroit, Michigan to nominate their candidate for the presidency. Although ten Republicans, not including Gerald Ford, have declared their candidacy, the nature of the presidential nominating process will inevitably narrow the field to one or two candidates by June 23, the date of the last primaries. Today the question of which candidate will survive the next six months of straw polls, fund raisers, caucuses, and primaries is about as complicated as an agatha Christie mystery.

Ten years ago the process would have been easier to solve. The candidate with the most organization support would have won. The New York Times headline on July 17th would report that “Party Brokers Control GOP Convention: Reagan Edges Con-

Smith-Morrison captures Super Bowl 42-21

By ANN C. ALLAN

Superbowl weekend dawned clear and bright; a welcome change from the dreary rain and mud of the playoff contest. Anticipation rose both in the Plex and in tiny Smith as the hour grew closer, and the air was filled with excitement as the climax of the season approached. Fans on both sides argued with gusto the merits of their teams, while empty boxes were backed by hard cash as dorm pride was hotly challenged.

As two o’clock arrived and the warriors from Smith-Morrison and Park-Wright lined up on Harkness field it became clear that this was not just another football game. Both teams were chomping at the bit in an atmosphere charged with grim determination. From the first play it was apparent that this game was to be a brutal, brawling battle of gladiators. The non-party obstreperous fans stifled their raucous clamor somewhat in awe as the action commenced.

The first quarter was dominated by Smith-Morrison. The game began as an even contest but Smith-Morrison’s hardnosed, aggressive play quickly established control. Outstanding on offense were Smith-Morrison’s Q.B. Rick Shier and Jerry Arar, both of whom scored in the first quarter. Park-Wright stayed in the game with a determined scoring drive causing the Harkness crowd to make the score 14-7 as the quarter ended.

In the second quarter Smith-Morrison racked up more points as Park-Wright went into a cold spell.
A student from Absecon, NJ, was denied his high school diploma recently because of his affiliation with his favorite organization. Aaron Morrison, 17, is a member of the Ku Klux Klan. School officials at Holy Spirit High School say that in order for a student to graduate he must meet the school’s moral as well as academic standards, and Morrison has not done this. His diploma will be withheld until he renounces his membership with the KKK, something which seems very unlikely at this point. Morrison organized a Klan rally in reaction to the school’s policy and says the school has no right to impose its beliefs on him. Jerry Kay, Morrison’s attorney, says he will sue the high school for violating his client’s freedom of speech, association, and political belief. But the Roman Catholic Diocese in Absecon is backing the high school’s philosophy, so it looks like this case will have to be settled in court.

On Voting Day, Nov. 6, a Montville woman was told she could not vote, because, according to the town records, she was deceased. Mrs. Alice E. Battler understoodably upset at the voting booth when the town officials broke the news to her that she was dead. Mrs. Battler firmly declared that as long as she was dead, she no longer had to pay taxes. Although Helen Pastore, the town registrar, says that it was all a simple mistake, she also remarked that Mrs. Battler would still have to show up at city hall to prove that she is still alive.

Connecticut, thanks mostly to Hartford, will once again be a major league sports state in a few weeks, as the Hartford Hartford of the Major Indoor Soccer League (MISL) opens play very shortly in the New Haven Coliseum. They will move to the Hartford Civic Center when it reopens. Indoor soccer is advertised as featuring quicker play and more player dexterity than outdoor soccer. The ball is also played off the walls, making it an exciting game. As for the aforementioned Hartford Civic Center, it is scheduled to be reopened on January 17, almost two years to the day (Jan. 17, 1978) when the original roof collapsed. The prime tenants will once again be the NHL’s Hartford Whalers. Playing in Springfield, Mass., the Whalers have been getting sur-prising, but deserved fan support this year. They are at the 500 mark, due to strong goal tending, experienced play from the two veterans (31 year old Gordie Howe and 40 year old Dave Keon) and exciting play from the youngsters, including Gordie Roberts, the talented younger brother of Conn. coach Doug Roberts.

And now there are 49. During Thanksgiving week, 13 black and female hostages were released from the American Embassy in Tehran, Iran, lowering the number of hostages to 49. The Ayatollah Khomeini said that selected hostages were released because women are sacred in Islam, and blacks are oppressed in the U.S.

AROUND THE CORNER

Students are thinking about their holidays, with most of them probably planning on staying home. But if you are one of those few who are going out of the country, this issue is for you. There are some great articles here for you about visiting Europe, for instance. But even if you aren’t planning on visiting Europe, there are still articles that you might find interesting. For instance, there is a great article about the history of the Ku Klux Klan, which is a group that is currently causing quite a bit of controversy. The article is written by historian John Anderson, and it is a great read. Anderson is a professor at Harvard University, and he is one of the leading experts on the subject of the Ku Klux Klan. He has written several books on the subject, and he is also a regular contributor to The New York Times, The Washington Post, and The Wall Street Journal. Anderson is a very knowledgeable person on the subject of the Ku Klux Klan, and he is able to explain things in a way that is easy to understand.

John Anderson may be the least known but he is the most interesting of the Republican candidates for president. He considers himself a philosophical liberal and a fiscal conservative. Anderson supports SALT II, abortion, gun control, busing and ERA. He does not support an across the board tax cut, and is against increased defense spending. The candidate would rather see improvement in selected weapons. Anderson likes the idea of an economically sound and politically suicidal increase of 5.5 percent in gas prices. In addition to limiting consumption, it would also allow for a cut in the social security tax. A congressman from Illinois, Anderson is giving up his position as the third most powerful Republican in the House to make his run. Robert Dole has called Anderson the "brightest guy in the group" of GOP's running for president. Anderson deserves more attention than he is getting...

As far as the Russians are concerned, it is okay for them to have mid-range missiles, selected European targets, but the reverse is out of the question. For the past few weeks, Andrei Gromyko has been visiting NATO countries, urging them to refuse the U.S. offer of missiles. Helmut Schmidt of West Germany refused the offer of the U.S. Perhaps the Russians are worried that these missiles, aimed at Soviet Europe, are more tempting to use than nuclear weapons. The Russians have warned the U.S. that if they install the missiles in Europe, SALT II could be endangered...
P.O. SHOWING ITS AGE

As most people have noticed, pieces of the building that houses the Post Office and bookstore have begun to fall. The Post Office is located on the first floor. Physical Plant says that the metal grating behind the stucco on the lower floors is beginning to crumble and this causes the stucco to pull away from the wall. A few years ago the Post Office moved from the basement of Blackstone and moved into the gym sixteen years ago. There are no plans to replace or to renovate the building. A few years ago, the Post Office was considering relocating the Post Office and the bookstore, but this is no longer in the master plan. Physical Plant will continue with preventive maintenance to keep the building in the best shape it can.

CLAMSHELL FIGHTS RATE HIKE

There's a show-down set for December 3 between leaders of the New London County Clamshell Alliance and officials from Northeast Utilities. The topic: The on-going construction of the Millstone III nuclear power plant. Don Murphy, Waterford leader of the group, says that if his list of demands are not met, Clamshell members will begin withholding 12 percent of their power bills. He added that nuclear power plants are unsafe because of activities ranging from spiritual to practical. The main groups on campus are the Christian Science Organization, Hillel, Intervarsity Christian Fellowship, and Yves.

AFRO-AMERICAN & WOMEN'S STUDIES LECTURES

The Intervarsity Christian Fellowship is an inter-denominational student group with approximately 100 members at Wesleyan. The group has a weekly meeting which students enthusiastically agree, put them in closer contact with one another. They also host a picnic last Saturday along with area residents who support Fellowship. The group is currently planning their annual Book Sale to be held in Cro later this year. Officers of Christian Fellowship are Barry Elion Small, President; Beth Brown, Treasurer; Abby Rhines, Communication; Tina Catania, Evangelist; and Stephanie Zach, Discipleship.

WESLEYAN CUTS BACK

Wesleyan University is doing its part to conserve energy, says President Coll G. Campbell. Wesleyan will be lengthening its Christmas break from December 19 to January 20, 2017, therefore that's an extra week of vacation. Burton Sonstein, Vice-President for Planning and Operations, says that the decision to close the College is based on the 2015-2016 results. Fayerweather Gymnasium will be closed during the break, and Olin Library will be only open during the day over the break. During the break, most offices as well as the faculty energy-conserving program could save the school about $40,000.

CCGC THANKS COLLEGE FOR SUPPORT

To the Editor:

This month the Connecticut College Gay Community (CCGC) celebrates its one year birthday. Although there have been gay students, faculty, administrators, and staff here since the college opened its doors in 1915, it was not until just this past September that the college community formally recognized that reality with the establishment of a campus group. This group was specifically started to meet the needs of lesbians, gay men, bisexuals, and those who were questioning their sexual preference. The group also works to promote a better understanding of homosexuality.

We of CCGC realize that the college has an ambiguous position in this matter. Some students say that the college appears to be lacking in any way that would indicate that the college would consider including the phrase "sexual orientation" in the College Equal Opportunity statement which reads in part, "It is the policy of the college not to discriminate on the basis of race, sex, color, national origin, religion, handicap, age, marital status, and every other basis of public policy or law to which the college is subject in its employment practices and its educational programs or activities." In response to our inquiries, we have been told by an administration member that we would inevitably be faced with the question: Why do we (Connecticut College) need to have a non-discrimination clause for gay people since the law does not require it, why do we not discriminate anyway?

In answer to this question, let us pose yet another: Question: If the laws of the United States did not require a statement of non-discrimination for the "sexual orientation" in the college Equal Opportunity statement with which we agree, would it not be our responsibility as individuals trying to survive in a "straight" world, to put the condition of gay people on this subject? NO HARM INTENDED

To the audience of the November 17 coffeehouse;

This letter is a formal apology to any of those in the audience who found my jokes offensive in any possible way. I did not mean them to be offensive and if I have insulted you, my deepest regret for this inconvenience. I hope that this will not deter the college community from attending this much needed activity which exposes college talent in a performer-spectator relationship. In my haste to begin the evening, quite possibly emailing an important announcement, I had not realized that a minor inconveniences will never again occur.

Sincerely,

Elvira

A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

To the Editor:

The New York Times reported on Nov. 13 that officials at a New Jersey high school are refusing to issue a diplomas to a Ku Klux Klansman who is a leader of the Ku Klux Klan.

The Ku Klux Klan is a racist organization committed to the denial of the basic liberties of others. It is heartening to learn of such concrete action actually being taken on behalf of human beings. Sincerely, Martin Alperin '86
THIS IS FOOD?

By CRIS REVAY

Not everyone dislikes the food here. There are some who are perfectly content to go to their favorite haunts for long hours with little probable praise, and never stop smiling. But there is a new criticism: people have been complaining about the food at Conn for years now, and most upperclassmen will tell you that it has gotten worse since they were freshmen.

One week was not a great week for dining. Monday’s “Sloppy Joes” were O.K., for lunch, but supper was a letdown; the turkey was dry and the whipped potatoes were wet. Tuesday might have been the worst day, when Tuna Chow Mein was served for lunch, (Oriental-style) and Fish Almondine with pork(?) for supper. Once again the meat was dry and so were the oven-browned potatoes. I left the fish to the more adventurous.

Wednesday’s lunch was edible, your basic soup and sandwich deal, but the London Broll that night was extremely rare. The herbed rice seemed uncooked and the Juliette carrots really crossed some eyes. On Thursday Sauerkraut and Knockwurst at least pleased the Germans among us, but the Baked Meat Loaf that night was un-settling to stomachs of all nationalities.

On Friday the Clam Chowder was the rest of the fried fish meal, seafood, but the minute steak for supper was, in most cases, rare. Saturday was not bad all around, but Sunday’s sausages at breakfast were thoroughly brittle, and words cannot describe the “Chicken Country Captain” we ate for supper.

Why all the culinary discontent? Where do the food problem really stem from? Surprisingly the quality of the food that Conn buys for your meals is top-notch, name-brand stuff. It is in the preparation process that something must go haywire. Most students agree that the food served at Harkness, Knowlton, J.A.-Freeman, Smith-Burdick, K.B.-Larrabee or Win-dom is better than that served at Harris.

Obviously something must be lost in the process of preparing massive amounts of food. One must also consider that the kitchen works with a very limited budget, which does not seem to make a lot of sense when our tuition is what it is. Of course, inflation makes things tough over, but is it impossible to adjust the school budget a bit in order to give the kitchen a chance to improve our meals?

The people at Harris whose job it is to feed us are hard-working and responsible individuals. They have sweated over hot stoves for long hours with little probable praise, and never stop smiling. But there is a fact remains that the food is un-setting to the tastebuds and to the digestive system. What the food program must do is to be done? Listed below are a set of suggestions that could serve to strengthen the food program:

1. Conn must be willing to spend more money for our food program. The extra dollars could be spent to increase the variety of the food and also to make what we are already eating tastier. How about a better salad bar with a wider variety of fixings? What about butter more often, instead of margarine? In- stant coffee?

2. Many students have suggested that an alternative “staple” food be presented at each meal, so that we could have more of a choice. One student suggested hamburgers and hotdogs. This goes hand-in-hand with the thought that more of a vegetable program should be attempted, since frequently the only choice for the vegetarian is the salad.

3. Leftovers should be cut back. A closer tally must be taken of exactly how much students eat of certain food over a fixed period, in order to better ascertain how much food should be prepared.

4. There should be a way to make the food more suitable to individual taste. For instance, hotdogs, hamburgers, minute steaks and eggs should all be made on hand and the student could get more of a choice as to how he likes his prepared. Perhaps students could even share in the cooking. This might involve waiting in line an extra minute or two, but it would be well worth it.

The food program at Conn is an important part of the whole college experience. It affects the way we study and how we feel physically and mentally. Meals are undoubtedly an important part of the day socially.

We are, of course, better off than some schools, and some say we have been over-campaigned. Some argue that home-cooked meals, but this should not be an excuse for mediocre food. Perhaps student government will see this as an opportunity for an agenda that many students are concerned about. Those of us who are dining on meatballs in our spaghetti?

COMMING ATTRACTIONS
SIGNATURES - A MIXED SUCCESS
By ANDY KAHN
The Senior Dance Majors presented signatures on the evenings of November 16 and 17. Credit should be given to all those involved in this energetic production. The best performance was by Letty Selkowitz, the enchanting young female who maintained her charm and composure while steadfastly turning away an onslaught of eager parents, grandparents, and other fans Friday. Her expertise at running a box office is astounding. If they ever replace Letty, I'll kill myself.

Following a brief intermission, David Delanty presented Zero Sam Game. His costume consisted of a pair of shorts, a football helmet, and business suit. The theme of his piece was novel and thought-provoking but his dance was somewhat repetitive. Again in the Riddle Is Round, an interesting plot was not very well executed. Jeff Frank and Aaron Joyner made good use of props as they contended for Robyn Silverman. The three used the floor creatively, but the work moved too slowly.

BUFFALO PHILHARMONIC
"ONE OF THE COUNTRY'S BEST."
By Lisa Chernov
The Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra will appear at Packer Auditorium on Saturday, December 1, as the third feature of the Connecticut College Concert Series. Directing the Orchestra will be Michael Tilson Thomas, this year's touring conductor.

Thomas recently resigned his eight year directorship of the Orchestra in order to concentrate on a large scale project involving various aspects of music in American life. The project is destined for a series of television programs and also for publication. Thomas will continue to guest conduct and has recently appeared with the orchestras of Philadelphia, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh.

After recording for Columbia, Deutsche Grammophon, and Angel, Thomas won his first Grammy Award (for Carmina Burana)

Despite valiant defensive efforts by the plexies, most notably those of Chip Maguire, Jim Connell of S&M was able to return a kickoff for another TD. Rick Shrier had another TD called back on a penalty. The second quarter saw the injury of ex-Larrabee vet Ted Connolly on a key catch, but fortunately he was able to come back briefly in the fourth quarter. Things went from bad to worse for Park-Wright. Their Q.B. veteran and outstanding football player Jim Barron consistently overthrew his receivers. While the plexies refused to give up, it was evident by half-time that they were demoralized and needed to pull together.

On the sidelines during half-time fans milled around, draws in hand, debating the outcome of the game. Many winfully recalled the daysgone by. One fan said, "It's definitely not like last year or the year before." Others agreed, and a few left early, obviously bored. More time seemed to be spent in re-living the past and in reminiscing over former do-or-die struggles than in debating the contest at hand. Perhaps the CCFFL needs a shot in the arm.

When the action recommenced, it was clear that Park-Wright was fiercely determined not to concede the title to Smith-Morrison. The third quarter saw the injury of Smith-Morrison great, Chris Collerti through a collision with Jerry Anar. The consistent and confident Rick Shrier led the offense to further heights of glory, but Collerti's meaning drive on defense was surely missed as Park-Wright began another determined comeback after his departure. The fourth quarter saw a surge of energy from the gallant plexies. Eric Mano showed once again with an amazing end-zone catch, while Paul Kiesel was there in the clinch with the third touch down for Park-Wright. While Smith-Morrison ultimately triumphed, it must be pointed out that the stubborn Park-Wright boys never said die, and fought gamely up to their defeat.

Their determination, however, proved unavailing against the smooth coordination, effortless confidence, and efficient menace of that awesome machine, Smith-Morrison.

Once again the Super Bowl has come and gone. The CCFFL is said adieu to veterans Rick Shrier, Chris Collerti of Smith-Morrison, and Tim Dempsey, Jim Barron of Park-Wright, and all other seniors who contributed, their heart and soul, and sense of tradition to those on their way up through the ranks. They will be sorely missed. Yet the future of the league looks bright. Many talented young and up-and-coming players are aspiring to the heights of their predecessors. Flag football at Conn has a glorious and action-packed history, and it looks like that tradition will continue in the years to come.

FALL SPORTS WRAP-UP

Although the Head of the Charles Regatta marks one of the highlights of an exciting fall season, the men's lightweight four traveled to Philadelphia last weekend to participate in the Frostbite Regatta. Last year, Conn.'s heavy weight four returned with gold medals after defeating its opponents by a rather large margin; the lightweight hopes to follow last year's example. Unlike other fall races, the Frostbite is a head to head race as opposed to a head race which races against the clock. The course is the same as that used at the Dad Vail championship except that it is only 1500 meters and not the usual 2000. Early in the day, the course was inundated with whitecaps, offering poor racing conditions.

Race time, though, the wind had subsided slightly. Conn.'s four got off to a slow start but managed to pass through Father Judge and Rutgers quickly. Conn. was in second place for most of the race behind College Boat Club of Philadelphia. With 500 meters to go, the Conn. boat began to inch through the leader and when they crossed the finish line Conn. was in first place, three fourths of a length. The four rowed by Peter Fiorely, David Butterworth, Tom Speers and Kirk Doggett, and coxed by Sue Cole, returned for the second consecutive year with gold medals. Doggett and Cole plan to return next year to defend the title.

SAILING TEAM

COMPLETES FINEST SEASON EVER

By Joseph C. Taylor

The Connecticut College sailing team has completed another exceptional season. This year's team, marked by dedicated and experienced members, enjoyed a challenging and fulfilling season.

Conn. participated in approximately 15 regattas this fall. In these individual regattas, an "A" team and "B" team, both "teams" consist of a skipper, who is the actual sailor of the boat, and the crew, who handles the jib sail and is necessary to the weight distribution of the boat. In light of the stiff competition the sail team has sailed against, including some of the nation's most notable teams as M.I.T., Tufts, Coast Guard Academy, Williams, Smith, Butler, and U.R.I., Conn. has finished with tremendous results.

On Sept. 19, the Blazers Trophy races were held. Conn.'s skipper and crew teams of Rob Hitchcock and Ted Doggett, and Vassar (A team) were victorious in the first place, one second place and one third place. B team of Peter Schoppe and Heaths Cram had a remarkable capture in the second place. Conn. has won this trophy four out of six years and has suffered its first loss at U.R.I. Dinghy Invitational was A team Losi Lovett and Louise Driscoll, and B team Leo Barbosa and S. Zurn.

Equally notable was the performance of returning regatta Irumpers, Campbell Seemans and Losi Lovett (A team) and Peter Schoppe and Anthony Butner (B team) in which they commanded 1st place first and knocked out of twenty-five competitive teams in the Smith Trophy races on October 6. Other members of Smith Trophy races were Freshman Invite Regatta on the 23rd of Sept. at B.U. This year the team of Schope and Neilson snagged a third place for Conn. over all. The Freshman Invite Regatta, who handled the jib sail, sailed in the B team and also won first place in Freshman Regattas on the seventh and the twenty-seventh of September. Skipper Edward Cesare and his crew Barbara Hirschel sailed in the Tufts Invitational on October 7 as the B team for the Eagles, taking 6th place.

Finishing off the fall season in the New England championships at M.I.T., on November 2nd and 3rd, was the A team of junior Jeff Johnstone and crew Joseph Taylor, and the B team of sophomores Rob Hitchcock, our junior, Tom Waverly, and Mike Groom. Combining a number of victories in their division, the team's final place was 12th place. On the same weekend freshmen Schoppe and Cesare nabbed a second place, in which they finished in the same place last season. Their next stop will be M.I.T. and Brown University.

This team of naturally inclined camels is satisfied with their team standings and looks forward to getting back out on the Thames River and practicing at the Coast Guard for the upcoming exciting spring races.

GOLD MEDALS FOR

LIGHTWEIGHT FOUR

The 1500-meter course was laid out by the Connecticut College Crew and was considered by most to be a challenging one. The course was marked by some strong headwinds and heavy whitecaps, which made it difficult for the sailors to maintain their speed and direction.

The Connecticut College crew consisted of Dan O'Connor, Tim Stone, Steve Vail, and SKIPPER, who was later replaced by Melvin Finney. The crew rowed together as a team, with Dan O'Connor at the helm, and Tim Stone, Steve Vail, and SKIPPER, who were responsible for steering the boat.

The crew started strong, but as they approached the middle of the course, they began to lose their momentum. However, they were able to maintain their speed and stay close to the leaders.

As they neared the finish line, the crew kicked into high gear and made a final push to overtake their opponents. They crossed the finish line first, winning the race by a narrow margin.

The crew's victory was a testament to their hard work and dedication. They had trained for months to prepare for this race, and their efforts paid off.

Congratulations to the Connecticut College crew on their gold medal victory in the Lightweight Four event! Your hard work and dedication have paid off, and you have brought honor to your school. Keep up the good work, and we look forward to seeing you compete in the future!
The Republicans continued... in July, 1974 for perjury, conspiracy to obstruct justice, and accepting bribes in connection with alleged attempts to influence government policy in exchange for federal price supports for milk. Although Connally was acquitted in October, his association with the "Watergate stigma" gives him a formidable image problem.

While Reagan and Connally are relatively new to the contest, Howard Baker and George Bush represent the new generation of Republican Party leaders. Baker, Republican Senator Minority Leader, has an impressive record of public service. His campaign, however, has been marred by questions about his role in the Watergate scandal. This has led public policy questions have made him some enemies within the Party. Also, he is a bland personality, a lacklustre campaigner, and has suffered from an early defeat in a straw poll in Maine in early November that he had been projected to win. Yet his strength in the early states with voters from the Watergate hearings still give him a base of support upon which to build a successful campaign for the nomination.

Ronald Reagan is the clear frontrunner today. Poll figures show him to be the leading choice among Republican voters. He is well-known and has been a successful television personality. He is a forceful campaigner, and has been working hard in California, Texas, New Mexico, and New Hampshire, among the states which will select convention delegates.

However, there are at least three serious problems with the Reagan candidacy. The first is Reagan's age. On inauguration day in January of 1981, Reagan will be six months short of his 70th birthday. If elected, he would be the oldest first-term president in the country's history. Another Reagan problem is his political record. Reagan switched parties in 1973 after serving as Kenesaw Mountain Landis, the head of the American Conservative Union. He has a reputation for being far to the Right. His efforts to preempt the Conservative majority of Republican primary voters for himself has not been successful. Reagan has maintained a surprising if he dropped out of the race to run for re-election to the Senate. In all likelihood the Republican contest will be waged among the four remaining candidates, with only a very remote possibility that Gerald Ford might challenge him. Ford has said he would not do so, but his political career has not yielded a clear choice by late spring.

The most interesting candidate in the race is George Bush. Bush has had the broadest range of political experience of all the candidates but suffers from the fact that his main source of political capital is his limited experience in Senate business in which he has gotten off to a slow start. The fact that he has had to take position on difficult policy questions has made him some enemies within the Party. Also, he is a bland personality, a lacklustre campaigner, and has suffered from an early defeat in a straw poll in Maine in early November that he had been projected to win. Yet his strength in the early states with voters from the Watergate hearings still give him a base of support upon which to build a successful campaign for the nomination.

The Connecticut College Concert and Artist Series is now in its 43rd year. For nearly half a century, it has brought in the best and brightest performers to the College and its surrounding community. This year, the lineup of performers is one of the most impressive ever, ranging from the New York Philharmonic Orchestra to the Buffalo Philharmonic; from the Frank Church Environmental Science Center to the Texas Ballet Theater; from the Barrett House in New York to the Washington Post's "This is a singular opportunity for students, faculty, and community", and it should not be passed up.

THE COLLEGE EXPERIENCE

By Jonathan D. Robbins

What is the purpose of a yearbook? Why do some people want an oversized book? An oversized book? Most would say it is to document the "college experience." Is this true? What actually comprises the "college experience"?

THE "COLLEGE" EXPERIENCE

By Marika Williams

On October 5, 1974, President Oakes Ames and the College Community met at City Hall for the formal dedication and construction of the new library with its new name: the Oakes Ames Library. Since then, the library has been a cornerstone of the college community. However, over the years, the library functions daily as a meeting place for students and faculty alike.

Several problems plague the day-by-day management of the library. Students working behind the reserve desk frequently find that books and articles have "walked from the library" due to other students' inconsideration. Students also find that the library is either too warm, too noisy, or both too warm and too noisy. By far, the most frustrating problem, however, has been the loss of books.

Without knocking the time-consuming efforts of the faculty and librarians, one can honestly say that the library serves as a "total college experience," at least that is what you wrote on the preceding visions, think about them. Are they not just as much a part of your college experience as the "college plagues library" does.

When my flesh is ripe for changes, I will become ash and transparent vapors. I will be fine water rising, I will be air in the arc of each wave, I will be earth. I will run within delicate green fibers, becoming poppy. I will be crystallized, symmetrical—snowflake. I will live everywhere.

Imagination

Crayoning the sky
White colliding with red.
Pinking the page.
Shadows
Majestifying the horizon.

Waxing yellow across the pined sky
Dotting it with blacks and beaks.

Birding a new image.

Sketching

Flighting the horizon.

Browns, Greens

Grounding the unused page

Golding the ground.

A wooded image
treeing the horizon.

SIGN OF LIFE

Old and shabby decadence.
Life is long removed.
Windows bushed.
Doors unhinged.

Grass has died a brown death.
Through the mass between the cracks of chipped path

One rebel flower has found its birth.

Bug Tanner Jon

Like from different planets or at least different countries
We meet in a clamor of carnival sounds.
You emerging from the heart of Harlem nights.
From one hundred and twenty-fifth street to a junction between my shadowy suburban shelter and your world of Streetsmartsandhustle.

Your language is lingo, while mine was learned in school.

I will never see you again.
We will never know each other as people,
but as symbols of two never-merging spheres.
I mean nothing to you,
and you little to me.

But I will never forget our fleeting encounter.
You are the everlasting impression of a vaguely vivid, dark, mystical, unknown place.

Our meeting —
To you perhaps painful —
To me rewarding and inspirational.

OFF THE TRACK

THE MYTH OF THE MARATHON

Five years ago running two miles, let alone twenty six, was a most unlikely thought. I didn't know what a marathon was, nor did I care. Running was for the gifted Olympian and the overweight next-door neighbor. It became a part of my life by accident.

During the winter term of my junior year in high school I became frustrated with my progress, and needed a constructive outlet. My math teacher noticed the tension in me and suggested I run with him. At the time I was unaware of his collegiate All-American status as a runner. Off into the evening blizzards we went, hiking boots, earmuffs, and all. How could I know the Boston Marathon lay ahead?

I quickly noticed an improvement in my work. Running relaxed me, and helped me become more physically and mentally alert. The amount of running I did increased as my enthusiasm grew. Consequently, I became more aware of my physical capabilities, which enabled me to expand them.

Humility and honesty are involved in long distance running. One runs for the fulfillment of bettering oneself. Nothing can ever take away what is gained and learned in distance training. The meaning of discipline, motivation, and total concentration become very clear.

Maxim Langstaff

Adaptation plays an important part in a runners world. Runners meet challenges and encounter elements in the sport that have to be overcome. Some of the physical elements one runs against are sun, snow, rain, and DOGS! There are also moments of great loneliness, and times when the spirit become dampened and demoralized. Times when there is a need for encouragement, which, in the end, can only come from within. There are always mornings when all seems pointless and the will to run almost dissolves. A runner must learn to deal with himself and the world around him. All that is learned is self taught.

It was in the early spring that same year I came to recognize running as a competitive sport. In the distance run the very distance is the challenge; the competition. A competitive runner does not compete with others as much as he competes with himself. Unlike many other sports, the victory is in finishing a race to the best of ones ability, rather than beating the opponent. To me this is the essence of competition.

On April nineteenth, four months after my first running experience on that snowy night in Vermont, I was at the starting line of the Boston Marathon. It was a blistering ninety five degree day. A little under three hours, and twenty six miles later, I crossed the finish line to the noise of brass bands and cheering voices. Yet I felt alone. My accomplishment was encompassed more for me than just the Marathon. It's value lay in the work and personal growth expended in preparing myself for the challenge.

In a world in which so much emphasis is placed on intellectual pursuits, we must not lose sight of the fact that a strong, healthy body can only enhance the understanding and outlook we have about ourselves and our environment.
