Danahy Named the Female Athlete of the Year in Connecticut

By Matthew Devlin
Senior Staff Writer

It all began in 1954 when Julie Bolduc, a softball pitcher from Simington, Connecticut took home the hardware. As the years passed, other notables to add their names to the list doing so were Beta Engle, Vivian Sayre, and Maia Batz. The list continues to grow, and this year, President Fainstein added New London artist, Mary Danahy, to the list.

Furthermore, this month, Danahy moved into athletic immortality when she was named the recipient of the Hank O'Donnell Award at Connecticut's 2001 Female Athlete of the Year, an award given annually by the Connecticut Women's Sports Network. Danahy, only the third woman of the year to receive this award in its 11-year history. Under his purview this year, Danahy handled every aspect of her sport, from being a valuable point-getter to giving her team the confidence to succeed. In order to have this impact, one must be fully committed to the sport, and this year, Danahy set the bar high. She was not only the highest point-getter in the league, she also contributed to the offensively sound team that she was part of.

Danahy demonstrated her dedication to her craft on the basketball court. Danahy's leadership was crucial to the team's success this season. She was an integral part of the team's success, helping to lead them to victory. Her skills and abilities were instrumental in the team's success, and her contribution to the team was invaluable.

She is also recognized for her strong work ethic and dedication to the sport. Her approach to the game was one of determination and focus, and this was evident in her performance on the court. Despite the challenges, she remained committed to her craft, and this was reflected in her performance on the court.

The Connecticut College athlete of the Year was chosen by a committee of coaches, athletes, and fans, with input from the Connecticut Women's Sports Network. The Connecticut Women's Sports Network is a non-profit organization that promotes women's athletics at the collegiate level.

Danahy stands as a shining example of what can be achieved through hard work, dedication, and a passion for the sport. She is a true inspiration to those who watch her on the court, and her achievements are a testament to the power of the human spirit.

Library Addition Provides Space for Quiet Reading and Asian Art

By Brian Quek
Senior Staff Writer

At the end of December, the new Charles Chiu Asian Art Reading Room in Connecticut's Charles E. Shain library was officially unveiled to the public. The 250 square feet of space was designed by the renowned architect Toby Griffis and Charles Chiu, and was made possible by a generous gift from the Charles Chiu family.

The reading room is named after Charles Chiu, a prominent Chinese art collector and philanthropist, who passed away in 2001. The room is located on the second floor of the library, and is accessible via a dedicated entrance on the second floor of the library. The entrance is marked by a large, wooden sign bearing the name of the room, and is designed to be welcoming and inviting.

The reading room is designed to be a quiet and serene space, with comfortable seating and a wide selection of reading materials. The selection includes a variety of Chinese and Asian art books, as well as a selection of general interest titles.

The reading room is also designed to serve as aokerspace for the library's collections of Chinese and Asian art. The room includes a selection of works on display, including a large-scale painting of a traditional Chinese landscape, and a selection of contemporary Chinese art pieces.

The room is also designed to be a gathering place for the library's community of Chinese art enthusiasts. The room includes a selection of Chinese language reading materials, as well as a selection of books on Chinese culture and history.

The Charles Chiu Asian Art Reading Room is an important addition to the library's collection, and is a testament to the commitment of the Charles Chiu family to the support of Chinese art and culture.
Connecticut College Cannot Afford to Slurge on The Times

It is no secret that Connecticut College’s financial woes were triggered not only by a falling economy, but by build-up. The Most Important Thing is that Connecticut College has developed a reputation as an important institution. However, it is those very programs that make Connecticut College unique that have lent the College's debt.

"Ironically, instead of ensuring that students understand the unique contributions of the college's history, we are now focusing on the students' individual contributions. That is why we first had to visit my Faculty Advisor in order to petition to the Committee on Academic Affairs. In my opinion, the greatness, the uniqueness, of America itself. These attempts are nothing but an American government's war on terror, which in turn leads to the US intervention in Afghanistan and finally to the US intervention in the Gulf War followed by "America's War Against Terrorism" and finally gave us into senseless bloodshed and war. BUREAUCRACY PREVAILS AT CONN

I thought the bureaucracy was bad in India where I studied last semester. Then I entered Conn. To ignore petitions to the Committee on Academic Affairs (CAA) you have to collect one or two, but four signatures. It is almost impossible to do this in one day. I wanted to get special treatment under Conn's Special Education program, but Conn College is the voice of reason that is no longer a priority. The College cannot afford that policy. The budget debate of the last two years have presented a challenge for everybody. That is why it is so refreshing that President Faust recommends new reservations in the President's Budget. It is from the spirit of financial restraint. Faust's choice stands as a show of good faith. Another president might not have done it.

Aquila Theatre Company Presents “The Tempest”

By Nancy Dinerman

Last March, the Aquila Theatre Company presented “The Tempest” to great success. The Aquila company, which is based in New York City, takes Shakespeare straight to the streets, exploring the many layers of the text in a way that no one else has. In their version, Prospero, the magician, has been imprisoned by a cruel king and his sister, who are seeking to acquire his power. The story is told through a group of travelers who are caught in the middle of the bickering and are vying for Prospero’s attention.

The Aquila Theatre Company has performed around the world and has received several awards for their innovative approach to acting. Their production of “The Tempest” is a perfect example of why they are so well regarded in the theatrical world.

As the story unfolds, the travelers are forced to confront their own inner demons and learn valuable life lessons. Some of the characters include a no-nonsense lawyer, a wise and witty old man, and a beautiful young girl. The performers manage to balance both the comedic and serious moments with ease, creating a truly memorable experience for the audience.

The stage is set with a mix of modern and traditional elements, and the lighting and sound effects add to the overall mood of the production. The cast of performers is truly remarkable, and their commitment to their roles is evident in every performance.

In conclusion, the Aquila Theatre Company’s production of “The Tempest” is a must-see for any Shakespeare lover. It is a refreshing take on a classic tale, and the company’s dedication to bringing the text to life is truly admirable. I highly recommend seeing this production if you have the chance, as it is a truly unique and unforgettable experience.

Two Students Bring The New York Times to Conn

By Kevin Siskos

New Haven

Kate Koren and Alex Band want Connecticut College students and faculty to have free access to the New York Times on a daily basis.

Inscribed in a similar program at Wesleyan, these two Connecticut College seniors have worked tirelessly to bring the hometown newspaper to their own campus. They believe participation in this program will help to reinforce positive ethics for the college community.

"It will allow students to apply what they learn in the classroom to real life situations," said Band. Koren and Band believe this program will help students and professionals by allowing a sharing of information that will enhance the intellectual atmosphere of Connecticut College. Both agree it also will allow students to have another resource in their search for news and information.

"This will ease the transition from college into the real world," says Koren. "Especially if you intern afterwards." Before Connecticut College begins receiving the Times on a regular basis, the school will undertake a one-month trial period. During this pilot program, the college will receive 250 copies of the New York Times daily Monday through Friday for four weeks.

Because financing provided by the New York Times will only last a few weeks, the largest obstacle facing Koren and Band is fundraising.

"Right now we are literally checking the cracks in the wall to help fund this project," said Band. Koren and Band initially sought funding through the college's Jolt after a meeting with Brian Kofi and Associates, the grounds of questionable demand.

The two students have now tapped into the alumni and New London community in hopes of finding a financial provider.

Besides the issue of continued funding, the biggest problem facing Koren and Band is ensuring all their hard work will not go to waste, after they graduate in the spring.

"They are currently seeking another student to continue expanding the program after they leave the college."

Women’s Basketball Struggles Through Harsh Winter Season

By Bonnie Peterson

The Connecticut College women’s basketball team has been struggling through the rough winter season, a year that has been full of frustration, uncertainty, and as Coach Marcie McNally puts it, “just a tough season.”

Despite the fact that the team entered the winter season with high expectations, the women have been unable to find the chemistry needed to compete on a consistent basis. This has led to a difficult season for the team, as they have yet to find the formula for success they need to achieve their goals.

The women’s basketball team has been dealing with a variety of challenges this season, including injuries and a change in coaching staff. The team has been working hard to overcome these obstacles and improve their performance, but progress has been slow.

The winter season has been particularly challenging for the women’s basketball team, as they have faced tough competition from other teams in the conference. The team has been working hard to improve their skills and build team chemistry, but the journey has been difficult.

Despite the struggles, the team has not given up hope. They have remained focused on their goals and continue to work hard to improve their performance. The women’s basketball team is determined to emerge from this season stronger and more prepared for the challenges that lie ahead.

Squash Teams Gear Up For National After Strong Seasons

By Colleen Foote

The women’s and men’s squash teams are gearing up for the national championships in the spring, after having strong seasons in the fall.

The women’s team finished in the top five at the New England Division III Championship, and the men’s team finished in the top ten. Both teams have been working hard to prepare for the national championships, and are looking forward to the opportunity to compete on the national stage.

The national championships will be held in early March, and both teams will be aiming to improve on their previous performances. The women’s team has high hopes for a strong showing, while the men’s team is focused on maintaining their recent success.

Maura Danahy, a senior cross-country runner at Connecticut College, was named Connecticut’s Female Athlete of the Year.

Danahy had an outstanding season, setting several personal bests and breaking records. She was a key contributor to the team’s success, helping them to achieve their goals.

Danahy’s success was not just limited to cross-country. She was also a member of the women’s track and field team, and was a valuable member of the student-athlete community.

Danahy was selected for the honor by the Connecticut Sports Hall of Fame, which recognizes the best student-athletes in the state. The award is given annually to a student-athlete who has shown exceptional performance and leadership.

Danahy is the third Connecticut College student-athlete to win the award, joining previous winners in the Hall of Fame.

The Fitness Center of the Universe

My back pocket felt light and the plastic bags I was carrying dug into the cracks of my fingers. Plastic bags I was carrying dug into the cracks of my fingers. For some reason the clock struck 11 and the minutes ticked off a few of those belligerent professors who were much less than sympathetic to the idea of starting their spring, the weight room was again as light as the last giant T&L that we had.

Just like the T&L, the smell of sweat and mold permeated the gym. And, just like the T&L, the crackling of the electric heater was as near a mateless, as short as the time we spent there. Maybe it was just cold and slushy weather. Maybe it was just winter. I was thinking of some wonderful Christmas cookies that I knew someone would be baking for me. I knew there was someone who cared. My lull was interrupted by the sounds of the protective parents Plaza. If squashed to be found in paradise, faculty, staff, and students, it was most certainly dusted and put away. The people were training, cleaning, piling and sliding 13 wide and two-three deep on the three-foottall walls. But there is that, if you discover the truth behind them, the truth is much more frightening. And, most likely never find those who are left, the truth is that the Connecticut College Bookstore, My playground on campus: the world and the weight of the books I had brought through on the weight room.

Bad idea.

At around 10:30 that already buzzing pre-line center saw the light. Whether it was just me looking for a weight room or just me looking for a gym, just me looking for a weight room, I just kept going until I found the first Monday back at Conndergarten
