The New London Police Department is actively engaged in a program intended to halt the purchase of alcohol by minors. The Citizens Council, a liquor industry and lobbying group made up of liquor packaging companies, has created what is known as the “Cops and Shops” program, in which police officers pose in civilian liquor store clerks in the attempt of deterring minors who are trying to purchase alcohol.

Besides trying to detect underage consumption of alcohol, the Cops and Shops program aims to educate the packaging store owners. Bill Edwards, a New London police officer and member of the Cops and Shops program, said, “There is no substitute for this training for those who serve alcohol themselves. I have training with the police department, and I share that with the clerk.” Therefore, according to Edwards, the program helps to make liquor store clerks aware of the possibility that a customer may try to purchase alcohol.

Edwards also mentioned that the programs hopes to create a stronger relationship between the police department and liquor store owners.

He specifically commented on the necessity of the interaction between owners and the police department, because of the potential risks in selling alcohol to minors.

The program fulfills a report between the police department and the business, and it should have a report with the police department because of the apparent danger of selling alcohol to minors.”

According to Edwards, the program is widely publicized so that it can reach the audience so that it can reach the audience so that it can be seen to the public.

Professor Zimmer's New Book: Emblematic of Conn's Top Notch Faculty

It is not unusual for the College to boast about the prestige of its faculty. Not too long ago, Professor of Chemistry Marc Zimmer published an insightful book in the field of bioluminescence. Numerous reviewers acclaimed the book for its relevance to a wide array of societal issues. The Connecticut African-American Affairs Commission recently named Assistant Professor of Human Development Michelle Daniels its "Person of the Year" in light of her achievements in the field, which included a slew of published works. These accomplishments are but a couple of examples of the high caliber of the College's professors.

While a Conn student may frequently overhear or generate complaints regarding budgetary constraints or limited course availability, we at The Voice rarely hear negative remarks that target classes or faculty. Quality of the faculty, the College cannot take its own self-characterization and that of the "Fiske Guide to Colleges" for granted. Indeed, the College is lucky to have the dedicated and accomplished faculty members that it does.

Black Panthers Posters Disgust Some Students

Dear Editor,

You might think that UM0A's infinite fork-stealing caper in Harris last year and CC Left's attempts to convince college students to buy such malarkey and convince college students to buy such malarkey and institutionalize the playing of the race card through "summits" and "workshops" for whites to confront their "innately evil and bigoted" natures. If there ever were a "White Panthers" group, demanding "reverse-racist affirmative action," cultural lounges," and a special "Racial Studies" program on the claim that other races are "too frightened to question or confront for fear of being branded as racists." UM0A's and CC Left's appreciation of such a sort of rhetoric. As John Derbyshire of National Review put it "One of the fundamental axioms of the diversity ideology is that white society, whites, and the belief that whites are innately evil and bigoted natures. OPINION

I THINK, THEREFORE I AM A FEMINIST

Dear reader:

I have something to tell you — personally. I have something to say to this culture of potential. You might say, that I dare to rattle against the three-year arm's up in high-handed indignation, you might even call me a blue-collared social justice warrior. But I'm just an average, well-inten- tioned individual who cares deeply about you and your society. I think — and it's been my experience — that this may be the only way to end this column.

Let the (Political) Games Begin! It's Oscar Season!

By Rachel Gaines

Whoever created the Oscar award categories did a pretty lousy job. The word “best” really doesn’t mean what you might think. That is why we all play a political guessing game which I don’t claim to understand, but which inevitably leads to awards being distributed in amusing, and often times inordinant, recipients. Like every other day in Hollywood, there are trends, behind-the-scenes guesstimates on that specifically for Conn students. Lists of random, film, time-wasting links make for brilliant entertainment when students are trying to put off that last minute project. For instance, students are invited to submit stories from professors and browse past favorites.

Members are also encouraged to submit photos of friends and events on campus. The Daily Jolt image can be very pretty occasionally, like a hazy annual Halloween Costume Contest and the senior gift auction. We also want to know how you think Hawaii will go in Hawaii, because the context is among the Jolts.

There are a few rules for this: labeled point blank “professionals” links. This section is now a place for fun and fancy articles like those one might find in a well-run magazine. People who run the Jolts... keep people entertained.

The Daily Jolt site is an open forum to facilitate discussion on campus. [The open forum is for general discussion of almost anything from school issues to current movies and music.] A forum for discussion of the contents of this site go to SSEAC.

The Award will probably go to Foxx though, both as a tribute to a breakthrough performance and to the memory of Ray Charles.

Best Director is unquestionably Martin Scorsese. The politics of the show this year will be determined by the acting vote. Since some clearing has to be done, even if it isn’t politically correct, it’s likely that Scorsese will win.

As for the Best Picture, there is no way to predict who will win this award. The awards home in the Best Foreign Language Film category. However, it is possible that the picture of the year, The Aviator, will go to the picture of the year, The Aviator.

The other three aren’t really competitive, so don’t bet the farm on what I wrote down. If you want to see if Rock can keep it clean, I’ll lay out a few scenarios. It is possible, however, that he might not be able to hold his temper during actual ceremony. One at least "e" will do just that. Also, if Rock can keep it clean, we have to look out for this year.

In the meantime, I would like to say that I am not only writing about a story about the Oscars, but also that I am not on the internet. The Onion

On Saturday, February 28th, twelve Connecticut College students and three alumni joined approximately 200 other participants in the Penguin Plunge to raise money for the Special Olympics of the Eastern region of Connecticut (SOCT). According to Gintas Krisciunas '03, the AmeriCorps member and office manager for the Office of Volunteer and Community Service, the funds raised at the event are used to cover the training, equipment, and programming costs for Connecticut students and athletes to participate in the Special Olympics.

The SOCT is a Connecticut-based organization that is used to pay for trainers, equipment, programming, and the general administrative costs associated with running the Special Olympics. The event itself consists of teams of participants, mostly students, who are tasked with raising money and then jumping into the water at Ocean Beach Park in New London, Connecticut. The goal is to raise as much money as possible and to create a stronger bridge between Connecticut College and the local community.

According to Krisciunas, the event has been a huge success in the past, with participants and alumni alike flocking to the beach to raise money for a good cause. This year was no exception, with over 200 participants and alumni participating in the event. Krisciunas said that the event was a huge success, and that the participants had a great time.

The event also provided an opportunity for Connecticut College students to engage with the community and to make a difference. The proceeds from the event are used to support the Special Olympics, which helps to provide opportunities for athletes with disabilities to compete in a variety of sports.

For more information about the Special Olympics or to find out how you can get involved, please visit the SOCT's website at specialolympics.org. To learn more about the Penguin Plunge, please visit the Connecticut College Office of Volunteer and Community Service's website at vocs.connecticut.edu.

6. Paris Hilton (There's a lot of reading involved... all those cue cards.)

5. Andrew Dice Clay (Do you even need a reason?)

4. Paulie Shore (His new movie is called "Paulie Shore is Dead." The man knows what he's talking about)

3. Al Gore (The show feels long enough)

2. Arod (Might knock the trophy out of the winners' hands)

1. David Letterman (We don't want to see a repeat of the "Uma-Oprah" incident)

Quoteable Camels

So the Oscars are this coming weekend, and let me tell you, the roving reporter is more than a little disappointed that Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle was overlooked by the Academy for best picture and The Rock's performance in Walking Tall didn't earn him a best actor nod. But it did get us thinking here at The Fun Page, there must be movies out there that you love that maybe the critics don't enjoy quite so much. So the roving reporter hits the streets in search of your favorite "bad" movies...

Senior Ross Morin: "Hmmm...'Sleep Away Camp III.'"

Sophomore Erin Sullivan: "Is 'Tremors' good?"

Junior Lauren: "'My Little Pony The Movie'... but I don't feel guilty for liking it!"

Freshman Renata Shypallo: "How about 'Crossroads'?"

Conn Women Have Mixed Results In Final Games

BY SPENCER TAICR
SPORTS EDITOR

On Friday, February 18th, the Connecticut women’s hockey team was looking to clinch their third straight NESCAC season championship. After splitting their first two games of the season against Hamilton College, the Camels were left with the task of winning their final two games of the season to secure a third consecutive NESCAC season championship. The Camels’ record stood at 18-6-2, making them the top seed in the NESCAC tournament. However, the team’s record was far from the only thing preventing the Camels from securing the championship. The team had also been struggling with injuries all season, leaving them with a limited number of players available for the final two games. Despite the challenges, the Camels were determined to secure the championship and head into the NCAA tournament with a record of 20-6-2.

The Camels women’s hockey team finished their season on February 25th after clinching the season championship with a 3-2 win over the Bantams of Middlebury College. The win ended the season with a record of 20-6-2, securing the Camels' third consecutive NESCAC season championship. The Camels’ record was a testament to their hard work and dedication throughout the season, despite the challenges they faced. The team’s success also served as a testament to the strength of the NESCAC conference, which is known for its competitive and skilled players.

EAST-COAST BIAS IN THE NCAA

Aggravating the headlines in the ‘east-coast media bias’ it seems that whenever the New England fans ask questions about New England teams being ignored by the subjective nature of NCAA athletics, this year is no different. Former head coach of the Texas Longhorns football team, Mack Brown, speaks to the importance of ‘up north’ teams being given the same respect that ‘down south’ teams receive.
