Good Luck!

"It is with this issue of News that we, the retiring staff members, give our duties to already active groups." Led by Nancy Wolfe, the new editors and business staff will assume our places, carrying on the weekly routine, but injecting into it new theories and methods of newspaper management and production.

As we have done during the past year, they will work to improve the paper as a vital organ of college life, and to make the name of the college beyond the sphere of the campus. They are privileged to present you, the owners of News, the most authentic and selective the ideals which you, the owners of News, suggest, and to forecast and report accurately life and happenings here.

Always aiming for the high goal set for us by our predecessors, we have worked to keep up existing standards and to improve in any way we could the college paper. Any improvement, any standard maintained must be judged by our readers; our experience is ample reward for our efforts during the past year.

In the words of our predecessors: It is with a slight feeling of satisfaction which we have justified, that we pass our positions to the newsmakers. We are confident of their ability to produce the kind of newspaper you desire. They have fun, excitement, hard work, and, we hope, not a dull feeling of satisfaction which we hope is justified.

Boston Life Shown In Marquand Novel

John P. Marquand again gives us one of his lively, penetrating pictures of a phase of Boston life in succession to his prize winning novel, "The Late George Apley." This time, in "H. M. Pulham, Esquire," he traces the story of a Bostonian who graduated from Harvard just before the war, reappeared from overseas to begin life in the typical twenties, experienced the depression and entered middle age with a new beginning.

As the focal point for his story, Marquand begins with the postwar reunion of Harry Pulham's class at Harvard. Harry is asked to write a brief summary of his life for the Reunion Year Book. He has lived, remembers all the events which he went through. The book, he was educated in the "old-school" tradition, and brought up by parents who, Victorian in ideal, were confused by the new century which had overtaken them. "Play the Game" was the rule learned by Harry at school, and practiced later in life. Moving with people brought up in the same traditions—preparatory school, Harvard, summer in Maine—life took on a pattern, every break away from this pattern after his experience in the war and became an advertising man in New York for a short time. But he eventually returns, looks back in love to college life, with a girl who has never known his way of life. He leaves her, goes back to Boston, and marries into his own social sphere. From then on, his effort is to adjust the ideals he has inherited to a rapidly changing world.

"Just keep a stiff upper lip, Gertie. Goldwyn may be in the front row!"

Things and Stuff

Katherine Cornell's production of George Bernard Shaw's "The Doctor's Dilemma" is one of the finest of recent revivals. Although it might well be expected that this old comedy about artists and doctors which lampoons the medical profession would seem out-dated, it has escaped that stigma by its brilliant sardonic wit. This evening's act on the doctors is a welcome anti-bouquet to the sentimental bouquets that have been handed to the medical profession in the past few years. Even though we recognize that Mr. Shaw's attack is one-sided.

On March 30 the Harvard Glee club and the Radiolite choral society will give their annual concert at Town Hall. The program will range from Elizabethan music to Bach to contemporary music. The concert will include Kodaly's "Glorea in Excelsis Dom". "Dausa Nobs Parent" from Bach's Mass in B minor, and chaussons from Act of Versailles.

In his current show at the Associated Artists Gallery, Raphael Soyer presents a group of portraits called "My Contemporaries and Elders." The portraits are of John Sloan, William Gropper, Reginald Marsh, and David Burliuk, among others, and are good paintings of character. He also shows nude figures of women at work, shopgirls, and other types.

With beauty and wisdom Gunnar Gunnarsson portrays an Ice- fisherman in "The Good Shepherd." Every year on Advent Sunday Bennet sets out to far pictures to see and rescue stary from other men's fish. This is the story of the last time he goes out, his self-imposed and self-less mission.

Wednesday, March 26

Dear Editor:

Over seven hundred students of this college missed one of the most stimulating meetings ever held in the campus—the joint meeting of the Science Club and Religious Council, on Friday night, March 21, when the topic, "How Can Science and Religious Cooperate to Solve Today's Problems?" was under fire. At that meeting the minds of students and professors alike were sharply and somewhat questionning. No, no conclusions were reached, no answers were given to any problems, a challenge was hurled at each individual to think, to determine the basis of his faith, the basis of his social code. This challenge, put in so many words, but there just as truly as it was there, made each individual search himself in an attempt to discover whether his conception of religion was purely emotional, devoid of reason, or whether his religion had any solid cornerstone in it.

Do students have to be urged by their professors to go to such meetings; do they have to be bribed with sugar cane, or are they just too lazy? In either case, in any case, over seven hundred students missed an opportunity to think carefully and searchingly about themselves and their beliefs; over seven hundred students missed an opportunity to think carefully and searchingly about the minds of their faculty in action. Their action was not of the type that they use in classroom to talk, to sleep, bored students, out of a vital, glorious kind that is moved to action by other minds of admirable intellect.

Senior Majors In Psychology
Study Methods Of Learning
By Marilyn Sworzyn ’43
Learning “learning” is the unusual task of Jane Bunyan, Dorothy Gardner and Jane Rogers, seniors in Dr. John Stewart’s experimental psychology course. These psychology majors have spent many hours in the psychology laboratories of Bill Hall observing the process of learning in human beings.
First semester Jane Wray and Jane Rogers conducted an experiment on rats. Jane Wray trained her rats to push a lever to secure food, to get out of a box. Jane Rogers noted the rats’ preferences for dwelling in the place where he was fed. At the same time Jane Bunyan and Dorothy Gardner were experimenting with the effect of the conditioned reflex in human subjects, some of whose classmates serving as guinea pigs. Dorothy Gardner and Jane Bunyan were rat experiments were run at a clicking sound substituting for a bell. Each of the Operations Board of the college attempted to condition her subjects to a conditioned reflex. Each subject was told not to move and was given a light flash of light in the same manner as they would respond to an electric shock.
This semester the girls have switched experimental purposes. Jane Rogers are now studying note learning by human beings while conducting the following experiment. The results of Jane Wray’s experiment, Dr. Stewart has proved sufficiently valuable for Dr. Scribner to found a psychological laboratory with conditioned rats to perform a certain task, and to prevent the rats from moving their tails, they were given a few “secular” responses, and at the end of every six-weeks project the girls meet to exchange results. “The results of Jane Wray’s experiment, Dr. Stewart has reported,” states Dr. Edith Putter, director of the College.
Prof. Putter directed the College.
Alison Greenwood, a psychology major, has personally named the individuality of the student. Greenwood’s approach is to engage in the study of the psychology majors, however, would learn to interpret the data in a meaningful way.

Professor Karl Victor, speaking on "Liederliteratur and the Crisis of European Civilization," began his lecture by summarizing two intellectual attitudes, that of the involved contemporary and that of the intellectual elite. Tracing the predominant features of dejection, melancholy, and pessimism which have been reflected in the writings of Germans since the beginning of the 19th century, he pointed out that these authors foresaw the chaos and collapse which today is so apparent.

Two seniors—who are next door neighbors—decided to go to the library one night, but neither knew or even suspected that the other entertained any such idea, because neither had ever established such a precedent. They got there within a few minutes of each other, and after wandering around for a few minutes, collided at the exitway. With shrieks of relief they greeted one another and simultaneously posed the question, “Where do you look up books?”

Ruth Babcock Recital

On Thursday evening, March 27th, at eight o’clock in Holmes Hall, Miss Ruth E. Babcock will give a piano recital.

Miss Babcock, a graduate of Connecticut College, class of 1940, was a scholarship student throughout her four years here. At present she is an assistant in the music department, doing graduate work. Miss Babcock’s program is as follows:

Bach— Allegro Animato (Italian Concerto)

Mozart—Theme and Variations (Sonata in A)

Brahms—Rhapsodie, B-minor

Chopin—Etude in E

Chopin—Ballade in A-flat

Palmgren—The Swan

Babcock—Gavotte and Musette in antique style (Ms)

Debussy—Clair de lune

Albeniz—Seguidilla

Other day he brought to class some ear rings that he used to wear as a boy, and cautioned everybody not to be surprised if he resumed his boyhood custom.

Almost all of the seniors and some of the juniors were honored with membership cards to the mysterious Three Sevens Club. We are all very happy about it and hope that it is not too late to list this after our names in Keene, as one of the extra-curricular activities participated in at college. (This suggestion is not ours but was given to us by an illustrious senior.)
