Why The College Needs More Prestigious Lecturers

The College should be applauding for its effort to bring guest speakers to the school. The experience of hearing and asking questions from professionals who have achieved prestige in their field is rewarding and empowering to students, particularly those who have chosen liberal arts education. While a few prestigious lecturers speak at Conn each year, we think that the College should have more big-name professors and decrease the number of lesser-known lecturers, particularly those who speak on obscure topics.

This past week's Daniel Klagsbrun Symposium is an example of the importance of guest speakers. The panel was well-attended, but beyond that, when given the opportunity to ask questions, students showed their profound interest in the subjects at hand. Audience members posed questions to the panelists for over an hour, and the majority of these people were students. The College needs to build on this interested student body, and continue to attract guest speakers of this caliber to visit Conn on a Wednesday afternoon.

We acknowledge the faculty and administration's effort to offer the College Community a wide array of speakers who can offer a wealth of knowledge in their respective fields. Our suggestion is to consider the perspective of students who have only four years to experience lectures they will remember in their post-College years.

BARBECUES, SWIMMING POOLS, AND GIANT MONSTERS: A SUMMER IN WESTON, CT

With summer approaching faster than a speeding bullet (what kind of punchline is that anyway?), here are some tips and tricks to make sure you have a great summer. And for those of you who are already looking forward to the fall, I'm sure you're looking forward to it too.

1:30 PM: Wake up
2:30 PM: Take a dip in the pool
3:00 PM: Have a snack
4:00 PM: Go for a swim or take a nap
5:00 PM: Play a game of frisbee or football
6:00 PM: Enjoy dinner with family and friends
7:00 PM: Watch a movie or read a book
8:00 PM: Go for a walk or run
9:00 PM: Relax and unwind

And don't forget to drink plenty of water and use sunscreen to protect your skin from the sun's harmful rays.

Hope everyone in Weston has a great summer! Enjoy all the fun in the sun! And remember, safety first.

I have to admit before starting this review that I knew very little about The Hitchhiker’s Guide to the Galaxy before I saw it. I’m not a Douglas Adams devotee, nor did I know anything more than what the previews showed. The biggest reason that I wanted to see the movie was because I think Sam Raimi’s performance in Galaxy Quest is one of the funniest I’ve ever seen. And his performance in this movie was just as saving grace, at least to some extent.

The movie starts with a very amusing introduction wherein the entire dolphin population of the planet — which is evidently the second smartest species on Earth, smarter than humans — sings the song “So Long, and Thanks for All the Fish!” I was rolling in the side of the number (that was one of only a handful of truly hilarious lines. Instead, the movie moves along at a very fast pace, content with leaving the viewer with a smile rather than a belly laugh. However, this pleasantness isn’t necessarily a bad thing. The film is almost perfectly cast. Some of the reviews I read complained that Mor Deif is far from the movie’s star, but his subtle mannerisms and pleasant voice make his character Fred Prefect a highlight of the movie. Prefect is an alien traveling the universe with the purpose of researching for The Hitchhiker’s Guide, and his day on Earth allows him to befuddle Arthur Dent, the story’s main character. Perhaps the most amusing aspect of Prefect is his insistence on claiming an ordinariness to the greats of the universe. Whether he is being slobbered on or the focus of cosmic discovery. At the same time, his insecurity and timidity are portrayed perfectly. An ordinariness and timidity is portrayed perfectly. Moreover, Raimi’s performance in the vast possibilities of space and time make for some great moments of cosmic discovery. At the same time, however, his insecurity gets to be occasionally annoying, and the audience gets frustrated.

232 SHORE ROAD, OLD LYME, CT
On January 9, 2005, a peace agreement was signed between the government and the NFA (Sudanese People’s Liberation Army). This agreement put an end to the 1983-2002 conflict that started with the north-south conflict. This agreement marked the beginning of a new chapter in the history of Darfur in the west of Sudan. Recently, violence against human rights activists has escalated and led to the deaths of several individuals worldwide.

Former NBA star Manute Bol praised the Core Chapters of SOA (Society of Observers Against Genocide) for their efforts to support the Darfur region. Furthermore, he emphasized the importance of cutting the human rights abuses taking place in the region.

But he also gave numerous suggestions to the students on how they might further help the victims of conflict in Sudan. Specifically, he advised students to use the American government as a means to change in Sudan. He also recommended that students write to their representatives in Congress agitating for action.

One of the tasks, Bol commented on his views of warfare Sudan’s future. He was not completely optimistic, and his hope hinges largely on American action. He noted that students acting collectively certainly have the power to bring change in Sudan. Also, who could ultimately find positive results in this work.

Upon completion of his talk, Bol and sister of former College student, and journalist, Margaret Bol toured the student exhibition hall and met with students who were interested in discussing the topics related to Sudan.

In the library, Bol opened the floor to questions. For more information on the Core chapters of SOA and STAND and their activities in Sudan and other related issues, students can write to SOA@connecticut.edu and STAND at stand@colby.edu.

The college community is greatly indebted to Manute Bol and his efforts in bringing the Darfur issue to the world’s attention. Bol’s message to the world is clear: the world must act now to help the victims of Darfur.

The College Voice

Former NBA Star Manute Bol Speaks About Darfur

By Heather Montgomery

Former NBA star and humanitarian Manute Bol spoke at Connecticut College on April 30, 2005, in Richardson Auditorium, to raise awareness of the conflict in Sudan.

Bol, a Sudanese immigrant who played for the Golden State Warriors of the National Basketball Association, was the first Sudanese player to be drafted into the NBA. He was also the first player to wear the number 72 jersey.

Bol is known for his humanitarian work, and he has been actively involved in the Sudanese community since he was a child. He was born in 1968 in South Sudan and grew up in Kenya, where he began his basketball career.

During his time in the NBA, Bol was known for his height and agility, which he used to his advantage on the court. He was also known for his dedication to his roots and his commitment to helping those in need.

Bol’s talk was part of a series of events held at Connecticut College to raise awareness of the conflict in Sudan. The college has a strong history of supporting human rights and social justice initiatives, and the talk was one of many events held to address the issue.

Bol’s message was clear: the world must act now to help the victims of Darfur. He called on the college community to support the Sudanese people and to raise awareness of the conflict.

The college community responded positively to Bol’s talk. Students and faculty members were inspired by his message and were eager to learn more about the conflict in Sudan.

After the talk, Bol signed autographs and had a brief discussion with students. He encouraged them to stay informed about the conflict and to get involved in the fight against poverty and oppression.

Bol’s message was a powerful reminder of the importance of human rights and social justice. His dedication to the cause was evident in his words and actions, and his message will continue to inspire the college community for years to come.

Men’s Lacrosse Falls In NESCAC First Round

By T. Demoreuille

Although many of you might know, Liverpool was one of the closest and most competitive field was selected based upon a number of factors: strength of competition, won-loss records, common opponents, and late season performances. This is a very good horse and has a realistic chance of coming out on top.
