Elections for officers of the classes of 1989, 1990, and 1991 were held April 19th and 20th. The elections were run by Pamela Kane, '89, SGA Public Relations Director, for the 1988-89 academic year. Carla Munroe, this year’s Public Relations Director, was a candidate for Junior Class President and, as such, could not run the election.

"The turnout could have been bigger, especially for the junior class, '90, but on the whole I was happy with it," said Kane.

For the class of 1989, 234 people voted, or 72 percent of the class. Ed Hewson won the election with 79 votes, followed closely by Jay Ackerman with 73. Other contenders were Ian Johnson and Sarah Pratt. There were six write-ins for the position of the president, and eleven abstentions.

Lorie Rubin ran for treasurer unopposed. There were 184 votes for Rubin, 50 abstentions, and no write-ins.

For Judiciary Board, Bethany Rosofsky had 132 votes, and write-in candidate Mark Rusitzky, 81. Official candidate Mike Coffey finished third with 73 votes. There were 176 abstentions.

Mach Acorn and Dedie Sutro were selected for SAC representatives with 132 votes. Courtney Church and Bonnie MacEwen finished second with 84 votes. There were 16 abstentions.

For the class of 1990, 268 people voted, or 61 percent. Carla Munroe, the official candidate for president, won with 183 votes. There were 23 write-ins, and 64 abstentions.

Rich Powell, the sole official candidate for treasurer, won with 186 votes. There were 5 write-ins and 77 abstentions.

Jose Benignetta and Peer Sporiir are the new Judiciary Board representatives, with 143 and 131 votes, respectively. John Rubin received 97 votes, and Nicole Brock 53. There were two write-ins and 110 abstentions.

Alumnus and Policemian Speak at Connecticut College Rape Forum

by Shirley Moulder

The College Voice

Beth Gerstein, '84, and Sergeant Daniel Nutt of the Watertown Police Department spoke at a forum on rape in Blaustein on Wednesday, April 20th. Anna Gelinas, '90, a student organizer for Peer Education.

Sergeant Nutt began the discussion by citing several examples of sexual killings because he said, "they all involved sexual assaults," and because part of the reason the victims were not aware.

"Awareness is the key to safety," Nutt said, and "you are responsible for your own safety." On Connecticut College's campus, women are often not aware. Nutt said that since he had been on campus no one had been suspicious of him because he looked respectable and wore a three-piece suit.

"You look as someone in ragged clothes who's unhaven and you won't talk to him. If he's in a suit, you'll talk to him... the point I'm trying to make is that men in three-piece suits rape and kill. [Rapists] are not all short little people in ski marks, they're people you know."

Although only one out of every thousand rapists are convicted, Nutt urges victims to report rapes. "It is important to get raped into the system," he said, "In important that they got a record."

Beth Gerstein, a Connecticut College graduate who was raped just before her senior year and who now works as a counselor at the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center, was concerned more with the emotional effects of rape. She emphasized that rape is not the woman's fault. Women often feel they might have caused a rape by their actions, their remarks or what they wore. According to Gerstein, this is not true.

"Rape is an act of violence, not of sex. Sex is in control of the weapon. The dynamics of rape are men talking."

The new SGA Executive Board is currently proposing the process of formulating its goals for the upcoming year. The board hopes to have a strategy in place before summer vacation.

President Sam Bottom wants the Executive Board to "build the strength of the previous year's SGA and expand into new areas as well." Bottom says that now is the time for the board to formulate its objectives and to consider next year's initiatives so that they can handle them "head-on from the beginning."

The board, although it has not made any specific goals, has plans to create two new positions on the board. They would like to create a position to concentrate on academic issues and another to serve as a liaison between SGA and campus clubs.

Andy Sharp, the new SAC chairman, hopes to become more involved with campus clubs and give SAC a "more supportive role." Bottom also hopes to develop a more long-term view among SGA members. He wants to see SGA have a service-oriented mentality and function as a resource and support group for the campus community.

Bohlin stressed professionalism and accountability as well as communication and contact between SGA and the Connecticut College campus. Next year's board will focus on academics and inter-school relations.
Letter to the Voice: As members of the graduating class of 1988, it has come to our attention that our living quarters are dirty and that there are also noisy and rowdy neighbors. This has been going on since the beginning of the year. The noise level isUnbearable and unacceptable. We have seen posters advertising events only to find them already over. We are tired of trying to have peaceful thoughts and activities and being disturbed by the loud noises. We have tried to talk to neighbors, but they do not understand. We are members of the senior class and feel that we deserve a place to live without all the noise and disturbance.

Sincerely,

An Explanation of the 3/2 Plan

by Will Meyer

Whether you like it or not the 3/2 plan is coming to Connecticut College. There is no sense in fighting it; we can maintain and further nurture its fine reputation and faculty without it. At the same time, however, SGA should also face up to the fact that the 3/2 must accompany significant faculty increases and academic reform.

In May 1986, after a year long inquiry, the faculty adopted a "Plan for Faculty Development" which outlined the major needs for the continued development of the faculty. The completed report recommended that, after increased academic support (even wonder who else helped get the school to shell out for all this?) Connecticut faculty should also face up to the fact that the 3/2 must accompany significant faculty increases and academic reform.

The best way to help alleviate the pain of the 3/2 plan is for the College to overhaul its advising system so that students can take better advantage of the fewer and more widely alternated courses. As a part of this, the departments should more actively encourage and support student participation in independent studies and honors work. One simple way to improve the advising system would be to enact S.E.C.'s recent SGA endorsed proposal of departmental catalogues. With detailed course descriptions, clearly defined Major, Minor and concentration requirements, and expansive treatment of academic regulations these catalogues would help students to plan their entire College schedule while still pursuing a diverse Liberal Arts education.

As Connecticut College's reputation and popularity continue to soar it is essential for the school to strive to exceed its reputation and build for the future. Adoption of a 3/2 plan must be considered as critical to this goal since it represents the best way to spur continued faculty development.

Will Meyer is a member of the graduating class and Chairman of the History Dept.'s Student Advisory Board.

SGA: Privileges Accorded In Whose Favor?

by Briggs Payer

Two weeks ago, tucked away in the middle of The Voice, an SGA news brief mentioned that someone (I forget who) had moved to repeal the special SGA room priority. Predictably, there has been much discussion as to how this new plan would down. The decision of SGA shows its lack of ethics in dealing with the student it is supposed to represent. If I am not mistaken, SGA is meant to govern the students and voice their concerns. I fail to see how this plan is any way closer to this end.

SGA's policy of voting for financial perks to its members has been misconstrued as an example of good government. If so, then I hope the bad example of the federal government's deficit has not followed too closely.

Some may be granted in the case of particular federal government perks such as travel expense accounts, as travel can be very expensive. In no way, however, do any conditions exist here at Connecticut College for perks such as travel expense accounts which do not pertain to the College itself. It seems to me that the political pork barrel has been open for a long time and that for years each successive SGA administration has been morally bankrupt in continuing this policy of self-aggrandizement. There are no extreme financial burdens incurred by serving on SGA, nor are there any unfair demands upon the members' time. They run with full knowledge of the demands of the office. They volunteered and were elected to serve. Furthermore, in return for the burden of leadership, they are able to put these positions down on their resumes. Why does our SGA need perks? Surely not to impress foreign governments. SGA is there any unfair demands upon the members' time. They run with full knowledge of the demands of the office. Focus: Women's Issues Move to Forefront

by Shelley Studer
Production Editor

Since Connecticut College became coeducational in 1969, women on campus have felt an increasing need to re-assert themselves. This year, a new group, People Organized for Women's Rights (POWR), has begun working toward this end.

The women's studies department has assisted POWR in its endeavor, and has sought to raise awareness of women's contributions to society by increasing the number of women's studies courses and encouraging professors in other departments to include more information about women in their classes.

POWR began last September with one long-term and three short-term goals, two of which have been, or are in the process of becoming, realized. First, they hoped to get a comprehensive sexual harassment policy in the Connecticut College student handbook. Currently, the only sexual harassment code is a parenthetical statement incorporated into the college's discrimination code.

According to Dean King, "it is so general it really says nothing more than 'don't do it.' Furthermore, students who had been sexually harassed 'didn't know where to go,' said Betsy Cotrell, '88, a member of POWR. Problems were loosely handled through a Dean's grievance committee. To solve this problem, POWR investigated other schools' sexual harassment policies, and adapted one university's questionnaire for use on this campus. According to psychology professor Jane Torrey, a questionnaire was needed because "the administration refused to institute a policy until it was necessary."

Now that the questionnaire is being tabulated, and it is clear to the administration that sexual harassment does exist on campus, POWR feels it has accomplished its first goal.

Jane Torrey, a member of the committee consists of four students: Betsy Cotrell, Susan Boren, '88, Angela Burns, '88, and Sam Soder, '88; two faculty members; Lynne Harlan (religious studies) and Bernard Murstein (psychology); and two staff members; Sylvia Miller (campus safety) and Charles Reipin (development). "The committee," said Dean King, "will not try people, it is not a judiciary group. It will address and write a sexual harassment policy.

The group's second goal was "a general consciousness raising," said Cotrell. They have accomplished this by sponsoring lectures and discussion groups, such as last semester's date rape workshop; POWR has also organized several support groups on campus to which students may go to discuss problems.

POWR's third goal was "to get at least one big speaker on campus, but we didn't have enough money this year," said Cotrell.

As a long-term goal, the group would like to establish a women's center on campus with at least one full-time employee to administer it. The women's studies department supports this idea strongly, and last fall requested that a full-time professor be hired to teach only women's studies classes. "As part of her duties she might be appointed director of the women's center," said Jane Torrey. Although the college has not yet agreed to employ a full-time professor to teach women's studies, the women's studies department has sought to increase the number of courses it offers and to raise enrollment in its classes. Torrey explains, "The courses are not only about women but are from a woman's point of view. They teach the belief that women are as good as men."

The department is also trying to get the college to encourage all professors to address women in their courses, "[because] women are half the population and half the human experience, [and] all courses ought to recognize this fact," said Torrey. It is hoped Connecticut College's new president, Claire Gaudiani, will support women's studies, helping it to become a more prominent department and encouraging other departments to "update their knowledge to include women and minorities in their teaching," said Torrey.

Dean King had organized minority and women's awareness groups in the early years of Connecticut College's coeducation, groups which, she said, "eventually died . . . it was difficult to get students involved." Now that POWR has established itself on campus, King says she is "glad to see it happen. A lot has changed for the better, but we still have a long way to go."

Boyd Reads Her Own Works
Blanche McCrary Boyd, Connecticut College's own writer-in-residence, will read her works of fiction on Tuesday night, April 26th, at 8:00 pm at the Lyman Allan Museum. Boyd recently received a fiction fellowship grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. This entitles her to a twenty thousand dollar support grant in order to write fiction.

In addition to these books, numerous articles and essays printed in national magazines, she is also a staff writer for the Village Voice. On Tuesday night, Boyd will read a short story entitled "Tarzan and Jane." Following the reading of an additional piece, she will hold a discussion about fiction. This reading is part of the continuing faculty-at-work series at Connecticut College.

Matt Fay, who replaced Marjane Geiger as the Director of Residence and Dining Halls, is a captain in the true sense of the word. As his co-workers pointed out, he is both a leader and a member of the team, a gourmet chef and a busboy, who is not afraid to get his hands dirty. Students who have seen him carrying trays and washing dishes know this to be true. Aside from actively participating, Matt oversees every aspect of our food system, including all the catering.

His philosophy is “Keep on serving them fun, don’t be predictable,” and he described himself as “aggressively creative.” The results have been many original innovations, such as the sushi boxes in the K.B. Deli, Cajun night, lobster night, and the Super Bowl Sunday day ice cream festival, an all-you-can-eat, make-your-own sundae bonanza featuring Haagen-Dazs, Ben & Jerry’s, Steve’s, Penguino Gelato, and Emack & Bolle’s.

The napkin/feedback bulletin boards are another conception of Matt’s which satisfied Cornell’s students and faculty’s hunger for communication. Matt and staff are impressively diligent in this, answering every personal correspondence and the serious nutritional concerns to the Dear Abby napkins.

Matt’s involvement with Cornell began at Cornell University, where he entered the School of Arts and Sciences. Three days before classes even began, Matt was working with the food service. Matt transferred into the Hotel Management School, enabling him to open the Westcott food service for the Cornell food service. It was there that Matt met his wife, a fellow student employee, and at the same time “became addicted to the field.”

After graduating from Cornell, Matt managed five different Friendly’s in Massachusetts and Connecticut, a Mexican Restaurant in Charlottesville, North Carolina. He then entered the collegiate scene profession-

Landscape of the Body: A Dramatic Success

by Shelley Stahr
Production Editor

The Connecticut College theater department and Theater One presented John Guare’s Landscape of the Body on April 14, 15, and 16 in Palmer Auditorium. Because of Guare’s off-beat modern style, to perform one of his plays was an ambitious venture, but the cast of Landscape met the challenge and produced an outstanding show.

Michael Schuman directed this difficult play and staged it well enough to make Guare’s flashbacks and bizarre time sequences work. The only fault I found was that the actors didn’t play to the entire audience. Chairs were placed three-quarters around the stage and characters often had their backs to the two side wings. Still, to perform nearly in the round is tough, and the cast handled it relatively well.

I was worried the acting wouldn’t match the quality of the play, but Landscape’s cast did an extraordinarily good job. Often, bit parts are not well cast, and this can ruin an otherwise good play, but Landscape’s entire cast was chosen well and performed professionally, giving life to even the smallest of characters. This is important especially in Guare’s plays, where bit parts are necessary to make the whole of the play work. Particularly good were Sandra Grons as the Cuban, Raoulito; Kate Churchill at Margie; and Kieran Murphy as Durwood Peno. The humor these characters imparted made Landscape’s pathos more effective, as Guare intended.

The most prominent roles, Andy Wang was wonderful as the son, Bert. By Andy’s performance the audience could hardly tell he was only acting, and was not really a troubled fourteen-year-old, deserted first by his father and later by his mother, Tom Lemco’s Capitan Marvin Holahan was believable and interesting as well. The only problem I saw in the actors were very small ones in the characters of Beety and her sister Rosalie, played by Stefanie Zadravec and Ondine Appel. Ondine was good in every respect except that her accent didn’t match her character. Granted, Rosalie was dead, and so her slightly nicked manner of speaking worked most of the time, but during the few flashbacks she took part in, her accent should have been either New York or Maine, or a combination of the two. Stefanie’s Betty also lacked the believability a good accent might have provided. Furthermore, Stefanie tended toward sometimes over-acting and sometimes under-acting. Generally she performed competently, but the importance of the character merited an actor who was more than simply “competent”. While Stefanie handled some scenes very well, such as one where she stands center stage and is stripped of her dress, some of Betty’s monologues, which were crucial to the impact of the play, were weakened by Stefanie’s inability to make them believable.

Though the set was simple, in its simplicity contributed largely to the effectiveness of the performance, as did Cat Goodwin’s lighting design. Despite my minor grievances, I thought Landscape of the Body was a success, and both cast and crew should be proud of their accomplishment.
Waterford's Crystal Mall: Shoplifting Haven for Area's Drug Addicts

by Nancy Grukin
New London Focus Editor

'3,000 or $4,000 a day is stolen from the Crystal Mall, and at least 90 percent of the shoplifting complaints are drug-related,' said Waterford Police Department Sgt. Jim Flannagan.

Prior to the completion of the Crystal Mall in 1985, very few Waterford Police officers were in contact with "hard-core" drug addicts: addicts who use such drugs as heroin and cocaine.

Flannagan emphasized that theCrystal Mall bookstore is a big complex of stores. There are about 160 stores, and it's very easy to go in and get lost in the crowd," said Flannagan. He also added that most of these drug-related shoplifters are committed by professional shoplifters from as far away as Massachusetts or New York.

According to Flannagan, there are two main kinds of shoplifting scams. The first involves a number of people working as a group to steal the goods. The first group goes into the store and memorizes the general layout of the store and its merchandise.

"This group comes back and reports to the people running the scam who then say, for example, 'Get me ten leather coats,'" said Flannagan. "Then the group lifts the goods and brings them back to the runners and they'll get a predetermined value for the goods."

The second type of scam involves independent drug addicts who go into a store, lift the goods, and then sell them for drugs. "They'll take the goods to different locations, either in New London or Hartford, and they'll sell them usually not for money, but directly for drugs. So there's no money transaction between the addict and the buyer," said Flannagan.

Flannagan noted that the shoplifters that usually get caught are the first-time offenders. "The seasoned pro knows how to work around the camera, but the drug addict steals to support his habit, so he's a lot more careless," said Flannagan.

"The drug addict really doesn't care if he gets caught, because the system has a tendency not to want to incarcerate. The jails are overcrowded, and shoplifting is really a petty crime," added Flannagan.

Convicted shoplifters, even if they confess to also being drug addicts, do not get punished very severely. "If they've been caught enough times, they probably get a maximum of a year jail sentence, and then they're back on the street," said Flannagan.

Flannagan also added that these addicts will never give information about their suppliers or when they are trading the goods for drugs. "They'll give you a few songs and dances, and they'll promise you the world. But as soon as they get a hit or they know that they're not gonna get caught, then the last you hear of them," said Flannagan.

Flannagan felt this area was especially susceptible to drug problems because of its prime location in the middle of the route to such major cities as Boston and New York. Sgt. Flannagan ended with a grim forecast for the area's drug-related crime problem. "As long as New London's there, there's going to be drug addicts and when there's drug addicts there's going to be crime," said Flannagan.

Fearing 'Infection' From the West, China Orders Students Home

Chinese students at U.S. campuses protested last week that they want to keep going to college here. Some 800 Chinese students from various campuses around the U.S. signed a petition and held a protest rally at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology last week to object to a new Chinese government mandate to force thousands of them to return home.

"It is a head-and-shoulders issue for me," said Zhang Longxi, a 40-year-old Harvard doctoral candidate, at a press conference after the MIT meeting. "I need to study comparative literature."

But the issue, explained Boston University History Professor Mordie Goldman at the same conference, may be deeper than that.

Goldman saw the new Chinese government effort to control the number of students enrolled at U.S. campuses from 27,000 to 600 as part of a struggle between liberals and conservatives.

Conservative Premier Li Peng, Goldman said, fears too many students are being "liberated" with Western ideas, and will impede policy when they return home.

Liberal Communist Party Chairman Zhao Ziyang, he added, tends to favor increased contact with the West to help China modernize its economy.

A spokesman at the Chinese embassy in Washington, D.C., however, denied there had been any policy change.

Nevertheless, an unidentified official from the Chinese consulate in New York amended the MIT meeting March 31, and said the students would have two more years in which to get master's degrees and four more years in which to get doctorates.

The official added fewer Chinese would be allowed to study in the U.S. in the future. About 8,000 first-time students enrolled in U.S. classes this year.

"The official also cited a January, 1987, petition signed by 1,000 Chinese students in the U.S. as a reason the Chinese government felt it needed to show more "control" over the students.

The petition had criticized the government's scaling back of some democratic reforms.

Ruggers Enjoy Club Level Play

by James J. Saunders

The College Voice

The Connecticut College Men’s Rugby Club is currently playing its fifth season, and the players are having a great time.

The club plays in both the fall and spring, and this year has had an A and a B squad, who so far this spring, have posted records of 1-3 and 2-2 respectively.

Unlike most club sports, the men’s rugby club does not plan to become a varsity sport, since college varsity rugby does not exist.

“Because of the rough nature of the game, it is too tough to get insurance, so no college or university in America has a varsity rugby team,” said John Natale, ’90, one of the club’s co-captains.

According to Club Treasurer Mike Sandner, ’91, “everyone who is playing on the club right now is doing so because they truly love this sport. We’ve all become good friends—it’s great.”

Like most club sports, the rugby club has a few problems, namely lack of a coach and lack of experience.

“We cannot afford a coach because of limited funds so we lose some expertise and guidance in that regard,” Sandner said. “We rely on juniors and seniors who have been playing up here for a while to coach the freshmen and first time players.”

Nonetheless, CONN’s rugby club is a decent squad.

“Our scrum (group of players whose job it is to gain control of the ball) is excellent, we have beaten about 90 percent of our opposing scrums,” Jason Stewart, ’90, said. “Our play is respectable: after our games, we have been complimented by the referees.

“They tell us we fight hard and put together a solid team effort. They call us ‘a scrappy, hard hitting team,’ and say that if we get a coach, we could be a force.”

Natale, Sandner, and Stewart all agreed that rugby often gets a bad reputation as a brutal sport played by a bunch of hooligans, and according to Stewart, “that is a very common misconception (which) is simply not true.”

“Yes, rugby is a rough sport, but most of the contact is pushing and shoving, and the rules on tackling are well enforced,” Sandner said.

“I try and large, it is a safe game.”

Natale agreed with his teammates.

“There is a lot of skill involved in rugby; the game is more tactical than people realize. It is not just a bunch of big guys throwing a ball and each other around the field.”

Everyone on the CONN team was in agreement that one of the favorite and unique aspects of rugby is that there is an informal social event (i.e. ‘keg’) with the opponent right after every match.

“The play is intense, but after the match is over, everyone on both sides enjoys an informal party— it’s great,” Sandner said.

The men’s rugby club plays its matches on the grass outside Freeman dormitory, and the games are usually on Saturdays. The players commented on their appreciation for the fan support they have received, and hope it continues.

The Connecticut College Women’s Rugby Club is in its sixth year of existence.

“As a team, we’re working to make improvements and to teach,” Club President Julie Westrate, ’90, said. “We have 11 freshmen out of a squad of 21, and we’re trying to get them to learn as much as they can.”

Co-captain Jessica Flattery, ’89, agreed.

“Our main objective this season is to try and train the freshmen players— who, by the way, are really making a great effort to learn.”

Westrate described the women’s games as more low key than the men’s games.

“We’re out to hone our skills, and better learn the game,” Westrate said. “We have seen some improvement because during the first semester we were killed by Wesleyan, but this semester, we played them much better.”

“Our scrum is playing well, and our backs are okay, but need improvement,” co-captain Kristina James, ’89, said. “Practice time and motivation are a slight problem for us, but we are all enthused about our last game—we want to end on a victorious note.”

Intramural Update

by Kieran N. Xanthos

The College Voice

INDOOR SOCCER: Knowlton won two games this week, raising its league-leading record to 3-0. The Zipperheads in Division A are close behind with a record of 2-0.

Last Sunday, Knowlton shut out Abbey 5-4, and later that week, crushed Groveo-Art & Guitars (1-1) by the score of 7-2. Enrique Badaracco, ’90, scored seven goals and had two assists for Knowlton in the two games.

The Zipperheads defeated the barking Tree Sprites 4-2. The game winner was netted by sophomore Liam Russell.

After losing to Knowlton, Abbey bounced back and trounced Then & Now Marshall 8-3. Ted Liang, ’88, led the winners with four goals and two assists. Abbey’s record is now 1-2.

The Track Team, leading Division B with a record of 1-0, were idle last week.

The Brewers swept a doubleheader against Walkers Talkers (1-2) and Then & Now Marshall’s (1-2) and The Larry’s (1-0), 1-0.

The Larry’s win came at the hands of the Asplundhs (1-4-2).

In softball, Bill Brewer, ’89, led the winners this past weekend, and have 2-1 marks.

Behind the power hitting of Mark Doo-Kings, ’91, Knowlton edged the Larry’s in its tight innings, 13-12.

The Alumni swept a doubleheader against Abbey and The Balls. Leading the Alumni was the clutch hitting of graduate student Dom Corso.

B-LEAGUE BASKETBALL: The Northern Conference is still led by the undefeated Marshall and Faculty teams.

When asked what was the secret to Marshall’s success, several Marshall players agreed that they don’t know. They said they are continuing to surprise themselves. David Bradley answered the same question for the faculty All-Stars.

“ ’Til teamwork,” Bradley said. “Teamwork and unselfish play.”

The Faculty Victoria last week came over the Terminators (2-3) with a final score of 45-41, and the Pe’s (0-5) 5-36-49.

The Bradley brothers (Michael and David) each chipped in 11 points.

Minus Gil, ’90, and Mikhail Bradley led the attack against the Pe’s with 21.

Marshall’s victories came over the Chubly Rodents (2-3) 58-49, and BURL (0-3) 58-55. Against Burlington, Gil Tantico, ’90, led the victors with 14 points.

The B-Team is currently in third place, with a record of 4-2.

The Hockey Team split the pair, with a 4-1 record. Rick Munson, ’89, continued to pace the B-Team’s attack.

The Southern Conference is led by Reagan Youth and the Hockey Team both 4-1. Reagan Youth won both games this week by forfeit, while the Hockey Team split a pair.

The Hockey team was victorious over the Running Weeks (1-4) 46-41, Junior Mike Moccia scored 16 points for the winners. The Hockey Team’s loss came at the hands of the Asplundhs (1-4-2).

In indoor soccer, Enrique Badaracco, ’90, scored seven goals and had two assists this week in two Knowlton wins. He leads the league in scoring with eight goals and three assists.

Women's Lacrosse versus Wesleyan

The following day on its home field, the COLN squad was not to be denied. The lead flipped back and forth between Wesleyan and CONN for most of the game. The Camels held the lead in the final minutes of the game, but with 36 seconds left in regulation time, Wesleyan scored to knot the score at nine.

Lorraine White, '91, scored one of her three goals early in the first of two overtime periods. Then, freshman scoring sensation, Eva Cahalan took over, tallying two of her four goals in the overtime periods. CONN went on to capture the victory with a final score of 12-11.

Men's Track & Field Bows to Rivals
Finishes Third Behind Trinity, Williams
by Kelly Bernard
The College Voice

The Connecticut College Men's Track & Field Team faced NESCAC rivals, Trinity College and Williams College, last Saturday (4/16). Trinity won the meet with 106 1/2 points, and Williams edged out Conn. for second place (44 to 41 1/2).

Neither Coach Ed Mighen nor the team, however, were disappointed with the outcome. For at this same meet last year, the Camels compiled just nine points.

"We got off to a good start and just kept going," Mighen said. "We got the [Fitchburg] men out of our system, and now we are looking to continue where we left off."

Indeed, the Camels "kept going" throughout the day's events, recording many personal bests and new CONN records.

Junior Ed Hewson led the Camels' scoring by placing in all four of his events. He finished second in the pole vault, setting a new CONN mark (11 1/2'). He then placed third in the high hurdles (37.39), in the 400 meter intermediate hurdles (58.45), and in the triple jump (39' 1/2').

Mighen was very impressed with Hewson's performance.

"Ed [Hewson] does so many things," Mighen said, "and Saturday, they all came together for him."

Things also came together for teammate Scott Cave, '91, who placed second in the high jump (6' 3"), and set a new CONN record, surpassing the old one by a full two inches.

Scott's [Cave] performance was probably the most amazing to me," Mighen said. "For a while, he had a mental block which prohibited him from clearing anything over 6 feet. Add one more inch, and he will qualify for the New England Championships."

Another, hopeful for the New England meet, is junior Hal Pratt, who had three fifth place finishes in both the 400 meter run (51.1) and the 400 meter dash (23.93). With his time in the 400 meter, Pratt also set a school record by knocking 1.1 seconds off of sophomore Andrew Donaldson's time.

"This is the first time that he [Pratt] has run the 400 meters this season," Mighen said, "and he really broke the school record.""

Throwers John Kvelder, '91, and Terry Fracassa, '89, shattered some of their own CONN records. Kvelder placed second in the discus (108'8"), adding 5'8" to his old record. Fracassa threw the shot put 56', adding 4' to his old record.

The only first place finish for the Camels was captured by the 4x400 meter relay squad of Pratt, Rick Mack, '89, Donaldson, and Darl Erickson, '90, with a time of 3:35.

Men's Lacrosse Team Falls to Tufts Jumbos

The Connecticut College Men's Lacrosse Team travelled to Medford, Mass. to square off against the Jumbos of Tufts University last Thursday. The Camels fought hard, but were on the losing end of a 12-8 score. CONN's record fell to 1-4.

The Camels once again had a hard time getting off the bus, falling behind 4-0 early in the first quarter. As has been the case in previous matches, CONN worked in way back to make the score 5-4 at halftime.

The two teams exchanged goals early in the second half. Midway through the fourth quarter, CONN found themselves trailing only 9-8. From there, however, the Jumbos led the game with three unanswered goals.

They [Tufts] capitalized on their opportunities," Coach Fran Shields said.

The Camels' attack came to life, led by Junior Jamie Worrell, who had four goals on eight shots.

"We had excellent momentum going into overtime," Jen Schelter, '91, said. "The defense was on and the offense picked up.""Today we played good lacrosse," Campell said. "Wesleyan is always a hard fight, but there were no mental lapses and we weren't going to be denied the win today."

The Camels intensity was evident in their play and their determination paid off.

"We were out to win, not to tie," Fulcher said.

"We had one of our last chances to make NIA's," Schelter added. CONN appears to be in good standing for the NIAA tournament. According to Campbell, "the competition is very even, everybody has lost games.

"At 5-3, we're right where we want to be," Campbell said. "If we keep playing like we're playing, we'll make the NIAA's."
Women's Track & Field Team Breaks More Personal Records

by Nancy Sotirhop
The College Voice

Despite a valiant effort, the Connecticut College Women's Track and Field team found itself in second place at the end of the meet with Trinity and Williams last Saturday (4/16). CONN battled with Trinity for second place throughout the day, but eventually fell just one mile relay at the end of the meet. With two events to go, CONN was ahead by three points, having won the triple jump, but Trinity bounced back, and won the next event to make the last relay the deciding factor.

"We ran a good relay, with the four best people we had," Coach Nick Bishop said. "We trialed as well as we could." Despite the loss, Bishop was pleased with his team's performance.

"I am not particularly disappointed. Sure, we wanted to win, but I am very, very happy with the performances. We did everything we possibly could do. They [the CONN runners] all put out their best efforts and that was reflected in the performances. A lot of people did not just do better, but [did] considerably better." 19 personal bests were set and two CONN men's relays broke the team response to the challenge posed by Trinity.

Points were placed for the first time, co-captain Kathy Grinnell, '89, recepted by winning the hammer, discus and shot put; the first time she entered in all three events in the same meet.

Grinnell broke her own CONN records in both the hammer (139.5") and the shot put (30.5"). She won the hammer throw by an uncontrollable 44 feet, and came from behind on her last throw to beat Trinity's thrower in the shot put.

"She [Grinnell] knew how important it was, and that we needed the points. She was really pumped for it," Bishop said. "She's the person you look in in a situation like that. She has the confidence and has through it over and over." While Grinnell has consistently dominated her events this season, there were two surprises at the meet turned in by freshmen, competing seriously in their events for the first time.

Allie Ivey, who competed for the first time in the triple jump in the team's unofficial meet April 13, jumped a foot further in the William meet and placed second in the event. After a single week of competing, she is only one and a half inches off the ECAC qualifying distance.

In the meet, she also qualified, with Caroline Pood, '91, for Baltic's in an spike group. Tracy Leavenworth also had a very impressive day. She threw the javelin for the first time seriously at the Williams meet, and placed second in the event with the second best throw in the team's history.

"If we had to single out one person who had a really good meet, it would be Tracy," Bishop said. "She was second in the 1500, only one second off her best on a very poor track. If she had been on a fast track, she would have easily gotten her best. She was third in the 800 with a big effort. She ran the one mile relay and kept us in it through the first leg. And, of course, she threw the javelin. She had four really good events. To do that many events that well is a very hard thing to do."

Men's Tennis Team Splits Two in Snowy Maine

by Eric Stern
Associate Sports Editor

Last Saturday (4/16) in Maine, the Connecticut College Men's Tennis Team beat Colby, 7-2. But CONN was unable to beat Mother Nature, who served eight inches of snow and forced their match indoors to an unfamiliar surface, where they lost to Bates on Sunday (4/17).

"I don't like to make excuses," Coach Tom Perrault said, "but we went from a slow surface at Colby to a fast one against Bates, and they just beat us." The match at Bates ended 6-3. What surprised Perrault especially was that Bates swept CONN in doubles, something the coach had thought impossible.

"That was quite a feat," I once told the guys that thus no school would ever sweep us in doubles because our double team was too strong. "I suppose that was a mistake." The Camels' overall record now stands at eight wins and two losses.

Freshmen Rowers Lead Men's Crew Teamat Williams College Regatta

by Nick Roosevelt
The College Voice

On Saturday, April 16, the Connecticut College Men's Crew Team raced against Williams and the Worcester Polytechnic Institute on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester, Mass. The water was uncharacteristically rough, and the times were all five to 10 seconds slow on a course that is usually very accurate.

The Freshmen 8 (Eric Freeman, Paul Ewing, Nick Stewart, Nat Cabo, Rob Weaver, Evan Lewis, Geoff Anderson, Dave Al- lex, and Chris Kinard) won its race handily with a time of 6:21 over Williams (6:46) and WPI (6:49). Although they [the Freshmen 8] continue to develop according to schedule they should have a legit- imate chance of winning the New England (on May 7) and the Dad Vail National Championships (on May 13 and 14). Coach Bob Gillette said.

The Varsity Heavy 4 (seniors Chris Young, Spencer Knight, Ted Wilgis, Nick Roosevelt, and Cox Vic DeGrave), with a time of 7:05, lost to Williams boats, that proved to be better than expected. CONN's boat, featuring Bucknell. CONN's Lightweight 4, and WPI. Gillette has high expectations for the heavy 4 and said that they have not yet gelled, but that the rowers "have identified a few problems in the boat, and I feel we are making progress. This week's ef- fort was clearly better than last week's, but also clearly not good enough."

Though the boat is made up of experienced and inexperienced rowers, does not practice together much, CONN made a bigger move late in the race, but ran out of time. Gillette was satisfied with the team's effort, as it's being slightly outweighed.

The Varsity 8 (Young, Wilgis, Dave Ewing, '89, Weaver, Anderson, Allen, Knight, Roosevelt, and Cox Sarah Tubbs, '88), a boat that, like the lightweight 8, does not practice together, lost to the Wil- liams 8, which is a "bonafide Var- sity 8" in Gillette's words, by seven seconds and to WPI by one half of a second.

CONN was ahead of WPI at the half-way point, but a powerhouse wake hit the crews and WPI recovered more quickly and took a length lead (about three seconds). CONN made up the difference but WPI held on to the end to claim second by a couple of feet.
