Industry and Education

Because of the rising cost of education, the support of liberal arts colleges has become a pressing problem. The formation of the New England Colleges Fund is the latest and most effective means for business and industry to offer broad support to independent liberal arts education in New England.

There are three possible solutions to the increasing need for financial help. The first is to increase the tuition of the colleges, the second is greater support from each college's own constituency, and the third is to solicit government support. Of these possible solutions, these solutions are not practical or desirable, and the most logical step is to seek support of business and industry.

Industry has been offering increased support to education through fellowships, research grants, and gifts to local colleges, but regional groups such as the New England Colleges Fund are solving the question of how companies can effectively give to educational institutions. One half of the contributions received is divided equally among the twenty-three major colleges and universities represented by the fund, and the remaining half is distributed according to the number of liberal arts degrees granted by each institution.

The colleges are asking for this aid, not so much for additional buildings or endowment, but for additional working capital to meet the increased costs of operation. With the easing of financial stresses, the colleges will be able to plan intelligently to serve the needs of private education. Liberal arts education is vital to the vitality of the country, and with a more equal distribution of financial help to the colleges in the fund, the New England College's Fund is vital to the future of the college and industry, but it is providing a means for raising the standards of privately supported educational institutions.

Two Diesel Engines Generate Light, Power Found on Campus

by Suzanne Rosenfield

When you turn on your light or flick the knob on your radiator, you probably never think of all the mechanical power and human effort that brings the heat and light springing forth.

Unlike many other colleges, Connecticut College generates its own electricity. The present power plant was erected in 1956 after the old power plant was completely demolished in the hurricane of that year. What we now have is an outstanding example of what can be done with Diesel engines in a well-planned power and heating plant; this is the Diesel-steam combination that was inaugurated at that time. After the hurricane, the college was completely without heat and light for forty hours, while New London was without power for two weeks.

The Diesel-steam combination, which was installed in the interest of operating economy, affords the college a high degree of power balance. There are two De La Vergne Diesel engines with 225 horse power each, a steam turbine, 200 horse power, and a Connecticut Diesel, 125 horse power. The voltage is kept down to 2080 volts and in each building on campus there is a transformer where the voltage is stepped down to 220, which is regular voltage. The total output is 500 kilowatts and at present, the plant is running nearly at its peak. There are hopes of adding another unit which really has necessary by far not been enough should any additional buildings on the campus.

Of interest to those who live in Sogh Quad and who find it difficult to make their beds by candlelight, will be the fact that there are underground tunnels that lead to Blackstone, Branford, Grove and New London hall from the power plant. Steam runs through pipes to all the buildings, where it is turned into water and pumped back to the plant.

In one winter day the college men used about 1,000 feet of electricity—a small amount which would supply the average family for one year. Presently coal is used for heating purposes but there has been some talk of oil being used in the future.

Play Production Group Creates Robots of Adding Machine Era
by Katherine Reynolds
Elizer Riche's "The Adding Machine," presented by the Play Production Class on Wednesday, May 11, was a decided success. The play was directed by Miss Riche's classmate, Janet Tupper.

The play was performed in the college theater and was attended by a large audience. The play was well received by the audience, who gave it a enthusiastic ovation.

The play is about a man named Zero who is a worker in an adding machine factory. He is married to a woman named Mrs. One, and they have a daughter named Two. Zero is unhappy with his job, and he dreams of a better life. He eventually decides to strike against the machines, and he is successful in his goal.

In the role of Mrs. Zero, Marion Kotler did an excellent job. She brought a great deal of emotion and pathos to her role. In the role of Zero, Paul Wodzinski did a fine job. He brought a great deal of energy and vitality to his role.

The play was a great success, and it was well received by the audience. It was a great performance, and it was a great success.
Another year comes to an end at Connecticut. It has been a year filled with many happy memories beginning with the freshmen bearing down the slope and the time the cry of “alight for New London”... House and dormitory halls were packed with home-front supporters who gave back their freshness and told their freshmen to hang on... Debby Gutman has done a fine job at Yale... neat clean girls on campus swapping the latest from the college shops of Lord and Taylor in Hartford... not so neat clean girls sporting clothes that smell remotely of moth balls... another year begins.

The annual Coast Guard Mixer and the usual number of lost pieces of jewelry set the fresh men and women on the social whirl... or did it? Then came the Wesleyan Reception to revivify damped spirits. The Sub Base party for seniors... Fun... The Amsterdam Concertgebouw赶来 to open the Concert Series... millions of juniors arose in the early dawn to sing the opening of Mase Hort to the sophomores and for three days the campus echoed with shouts of Havar... Music Hunt... Mase Hort.

The final seniors attending the Thames for its maiden voyage... Alumnae Day brought the fresh men back to college... The Chem Building gets painted in shades of varying colors... colors that will not let the students sleep through classes.

Another visit to the Library for another chance to view some of the fine items on hand at that time.
