Faculty dismisses calendar proposals;
Student Assembly promises action

By Jody Schwartz

The results of the student referendum, which asked that there be an additional three days allowed for the review and exam period, show the majority of students in favor of an extension. College Secretary William Churchill stated that the referendum had a "definite impact." Churchill asserted that at a meeting Tuesday morning there was a proposal to extend the academic calendar for the first semester by two days.

Churchill described the proposal as a "trade-off," explaining that a two-day extension of the exam period first semester would mean postponing by two days the start of the second semester.

However, the proposed change was heavily defeated by the student council afternoon on the principle that once the calendar is accepted it should not be changed. There was little debate, according to sources. On whether the proposed change in the calendar would have aided the student's education.

Student Assembly has decided to take further action on the question. They are upset that their sentiment and the unanimous approval of the calendar change by the College Council was virtually ignored by the faculty. Specific action had not been decided by press time.

Text book purchases may be tax-exempt

By Mimis Ginett

An investigation of the campus bookstore, which has been conducted over the last two weeks, has revealed not only presentable means of altering the cost of books from the distributors, or subsequently, from the bookstore itself.

The investigation has revealed, however, the unfortunate fact that the prices of paper, production, and background expenses of publishing are on a steady increase.

Although many products which are available for sale on campus can be purchased for less money at other stores, course books happen to be an immediate necessity for one's college education.

Course books are most often purchased immediately after registration for the sake of convenience and practicality. Many students fear that specific orders will soon be sold out and that the library copies might not be available. Many prefer to use the same copy of a book as the professor, so that it will be easier to refer to specified pages.

In view of these natural and unalterable circumstances, efforts to minimize the amount of money which students are forced to pay each semester on course books have been directed towards a different type of solution.

1969 a bulletin was issued by the Tax Administration of Rhode Island, exempting books sold on college campuses for educational purposes from the state sales tax. A copy of this bulletin was obtained through the Rhode Island Sales and Use Tax Regulations Bureau, under the heading of "Sales by educational institutions." The bulletin reads:

"Educational institutions not operated for profit which make sales of educational materials to members of their student and faculty bodies are not regarded as engaged in the business of making sales at retail within the meaning of the provisions of the Rhode Island Sales and Use Tax Act. Accordingly, sales by such institutions to students and faculty of books, supplies and equipment used in connection with any of the courses offered by such institutions are not subject to the tax. However, the sale by such institutions of any other items of tangible personal property such as jewelry, china, wearing apparel, pens, pencils, candy and cosmetics are subject to the sales tax. The sale of such taxable items requires a permit to make sales at retail and the collection of the tax. The enumeration of the foregoing taxable items is made by way of illustration and not limitation. "Sales by educational institutions" is meant those institutions of learning which are engaged in giving courses in instruction to student bodies, I.e., schools, academies, colleges and universities.

By using this bulletin as an example, there are hopes of attaining a similar privilege in the state of Connecticut.

Under the authority of Rick Allen, president of student government, letters are being sent to presidents of student governments at other schools in the state, asking for their cooperation and support in this attempt, since a savings of the 7% sales tax would be substantial.
Who will be attracted by an unsafe campus?

You didn’t ask enough questions

The Connecticut College Student Assembly approved a resolution supporting the members of the New London Metal Trades Council (MTC) in their strike against Electric Boat.

Their belief that the Connecticut College Community, as a member of the New London area and its surrounding communities, has the right to involve itself in these matters is commendable. But when Student Assembly decides to take a position on such issues, the primary consideration should be to responsibly represent a majority opinion of the student body.

The decision to support the striking workers was an irresponsible and disappointing act not only because it is questionable as to whether it represented a majority opinion of the student body, but also because the interests of the EB management were never even considered. Objective evaluation of any issue involves a closer consideration of all the facts from both sides.

In a time of financial strain it is important for the college to establish priorities as to where its money will be spent. These priorities should include the safety and well being of the college community.

Cutting back on security, as was done this year, should never have occurred if the school had carefully evaluated its spending. A $7,000 cut in security’s budget means that South Campus must lose its 4:00-12:00 p.m. foot patrol and return to the '73-'74 security level. Chiel O’Grady has termed this level unsafe. Over the past years the school has been working to increase security only to have its efforts negated.

In the meantime, the budget for publications has increased over 15,000 since last year for the purpose of printing the new view book. The money was spent in this area even before the budget was approved which meant it could not be cut. Seven thousand dollars from an area of the budget could have been redirected to security to maintain an effective level of protection. We call on the college at a time when money is so tight to seriously consider their spending priorities.

Give us a tax break

With the rising costs of tuition, room and board, and everyday living, achieving an education is not an inexpensive proposition. Wherever and whenever unnecessary costs can be eliminated, every attempt should be made to do so.

At this time, attempts are being made for colleges in the state of Connecticut to join efforts in order to attain a common financial privilege. This privilege would exempt books sold on college campuses in the state, for educational purposes, from the 7 per cent state sales tax.

We believe wholeheartedly in this endeavor and offer our support and hope for its achievement.

letters to the editors

not outdated

To the Editor:

Contrary to Mark Godleslener’s assertion in the October 3 “letters” column, the new library will not be outdated in ten years. It is designed to accommodate the needs of the College without major alteration until the beginning of the 21st century, providing shelf space for half a million books, seats for 550 readers, and flexible office space for the staff. Additional power and communications lines can be installed throughout the building for future needs, and provision has been made for expansion of the building to the north when more book and reader space is needed.

To the Editor:

I am very pleased to see the Judiciary Board's stand on the issue of cigarette smoking in the dining halls. As a non-smoker, I can’t begin to express my gratitude to these young Americans, who are unwilling to take a staunch stand against the rising tide of creeping conformity. They are protecting the cherished ideal of American freedom, and I say that their action has been long overdue. These “people” are a danger and must be put in their place. This is a college, and it is meant as a place of education and self-expression; not some goddamn home where people can do what they want.

Let people do what they want to in the dining halls, and the first thing you know, they might start choking. We are all aware, I think, that complacency has no place in a functioning democracy. Cigarette smoke is at least as pervasive as the New London air that we all breathe, and nearly as hazardous to the health of the non-smoker. This evil must be stamped out quickly and effectively.

I would add that this is only the first step. I propose that blue-jeans and flannel shirts also be prohibited from the dining halls. I know there may be some detractors out there who will say that these items pose no health hazard, but to them I reply, “Is mental health any less important than physical health? Do you not mind having your minds bent and forced into a position where you have to grow your hair long in order to be accepted?” No, this will never do.

The right of freedom of choice has been grossly abused by these people, and I say that for their own good it should be taken away from them. I therefore propose that uniforms be issued to all students and that there be even continued on page three.
and grooming inspections at least once a month. This is not some East European puppet government, but this is America. Of course, the students would get their propaganda back in May, perhaps even during finals — what they do on their own time is of no concern to me and I hope they don’t impose on my behavior.

Sincerely,
Bill Lattanzi
78 American non-smoker.

exam schedule

To the Editor:
I have had a varied and interesting three years at Connecticut College. During this time I have enjoyed many of the different aspects of college life. However, as I plan to graduate, many of those aspects have become more important. Today I have been given a ballot for a student referendum on the question of whether to support the Student Assembly and College day extension to the examination period. As a current student, I argue against this proposal as the strain which the additional money, necessary for such an extension, would put on our budget. A reduction of the point is that the additional cost would only be between five and eight thousand dollars in a budget of $11 million. Five to eight thousand dollars is, even during tough economic times, a lot of money. This attempt to extend the costs within the campus budget does much more harm than a cursory glance on the part of the students or the administration.

The student body is the determining factor in a college's existence. For the student body to vote itself in from the determination of a budget is to ignore the concerns and contributions which can be expected. To demand students recognition in matters such as this constitutes a serious error on the part of the administration. This argument is based on the assumption that the student is aware and responsive enough to impact a rational sense in the planning of its budget. It is true that we have the right to be heard, but I cannot express the fact that, this basic assumption can be questioned.

We consider the non-sensical and stupid behavior of some people at this college which constitutes a serious part of the vandalism. There are many types of vandalism — from breaking a pane of glass to cutting up a living room carpet even including the snuffing of a cigarette on the floor of a custodian's office. For the point here is not to reprimand the vandal (though I myself have, on occasion, been reprimanded), but to remind one that all we are aware of this is going on and we have not, with a student body, organized against it. The costs incurred from the abuse of property are far greater than that of a three day extension to our exam period.

We are all guilty of this vandalism. For the students to meet their responsibilities is not enough to reverse President Ames' decision over the expenditure of this year. We should not have done anything with respect to their social environment is to be hypocritical.

What gives the student the right to request that a college remain open when it is apparent that directly or indirectly, in individually or as a group, the people here have little respect for themselves? It would be very easy to say that this argument is stereotyped in authoritarianism. I choose to ignore the feeling that "if you want respect, prove that you deserve it". Instead I am painfully aware that the money spent correcting the blight of vandalism will be spent on extension of the exam period — an extension which would be extremely beneficial to my personal life as a student. However, there is a cost to everything. We as students have not requested students to have the college coffers. We have not effectively motivated the public to request a three day extension on the examination period is a selfish one. For these reasons I urge NO on the referendum of last week.

Respectfully,
Whit Smith '77

JB revises rules

By Laura Brown
The proposed revisions of the Academic and Social Honor Codes have been under discussion for the past two years. Student Rights President Rick Gugino, President Richard Riordan, and several members of the faculty have expressed their opinions on the revisions and comments, "I think they're excellent - it's about time the Social Honor Codes got as much attention as the Academic ones."

The Social Honor Codes are primarily aimed to protect the actions of individual students. Students are now held responsible for their own actions and the actions of their guests on all college property throughout the 24 hour period.

Smoking issue unresolved

A Student Assembly referendum was held last Friday to determine student opinion on the possibility of limiting or banning smoking in dining halls. The referendum was held in response to numerous complaints brought to the Judiciary Board three weeks ago concerning smoking in Hayes, especially during weekend meals.

Students voted no (336-296) to a complete prohibition during meal hours. 143 of those students who voted no, however, were in favor of limiting smoking in the dining halls during meal hours. The results of this referendum were announced Monday evening as they discussed specific solutions to the smoking issue. Any action taken by the government to limit smoking, however, would not be binding, as smoking is legally permitted in all public areas.

Students endorse recycling

We, the representatives of the student body at Connecticut College unanimously urge that the college adopt a recycling program, comprehensive in nature and year round in span; to be run jointly by Physical Plant, the Residence Department, and Survival. The program should be run as part of the college’s waste disposal operation. The program should not depend on volunteer help for the bulk of the heavy labor involved.

We support the President’s action in assigning the Environmental Models Committee the task of designing and implementing the program. Furthermore, we urge the President to give priority to a proposal implementation.

This resolution was also endorsed by College Council.

Since DeGregory is up for re-election in December, he may be replaced by someone who does not agree with this pledge.

Lawrence and Memorial Accredited

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals has given Lawrence and Memorial Hospitals a two-year accreditation.

The commission, which is sponsored by the American College of Physicians, the American College of Surgeons, the American Hospital Association, and the American Medical Association, sent a survey team composed of doctors, hospital administrators, and nurses, to examine the hospitals. Lawrence's was the second in the state to get a two-year Accreditation.

"No Nonsense" on Bank Street

The Bank Street area can expect an increase in police foot patrols this month. The area has a "no nonsense" attitude toward crime if Nicholas N. Gorra is elected to City Council.

Gorra, who is the Republican candidate, was quoted in the Daily: "The frequency of attacks and muggings has provided the area with an attitude of fear. This is intolerable and must not be tolerated by any candidate for City Council."

Gorra's campaign coordinator, resigned his position last week after releasing statements by Gorra which criticized Deputy Mayor William Nahas and淌 Councillor F. DiMaggio.

Garbage Ordinances Violated

Last Friday, several merchants with signs on Captain's Walk were charged with violations of trash ordinances. Although the merchants feel that this crackdown was unjustified, the State Department of Commerce in Southeastern Connecticut applauded the city's police. The violations were: the use of improper containers and neglecting to collapse cardboard containers.

E.B. Strike Moved to D.C.
Federal Mediator, John G. Zanzararo, was instrumental in having the negotiations in the 14-week-old E.B. strike moved to Washington, D.C.

The move came after a 21-hour bargaining session last Friday between federal mediators and negotiators for the Metal Trades Council and Electric Local 90. The meeting proved futile, with management still holding to its "take it or leave it" position on Article 40.

A spokesman for the federal mediator said there was only one breakthrough at the meeting: a union proposal which would leave Article 40, Work Practices and Assignments (interchangeability), in the contract and allow the union to review, case by case, all changes in work assignments.

MTC President Anthony DeGregory once again voiced his opposition to the talks being moved to Washington.

On the issue of idle time, DeGregory has said that only 5 per cent of that time is caused by craft distinctions; the remaining 95 per cent was attributed to E.B. management's "inexcusable" attitude toward crime if Nicholas N. Gorra is elected to City Council.

TAX CUT X

For political as well as economic reasons, President Ford has hinted that he plans to extend the present anti-inflation tax cut tidal wave. And since the Democratic-controlled Congress is expected to support the extension, the measure would then be forced to undergo an unopposed vote.

William Simon, Treasury Secretary, has opposed the tax cut, fearing the need to sustain larger deficits in the Federal budget. These deficits would stimulate inflation and increase interest rates. He has suggested that the tax cut should then be conditional upon a Congressional agreement to hold spending within limits.

Where they left off

by Jeanne Feeney

Despite their age differences—both forty-six and twenty-four years old—Jill Silverstein has something in common with Townsend and twenty-four year old Olivia Ford has benefited that be part of this. Townsend is a student at Connecticut College under the Return to College program. This program allows people to return to school to complete their college education after they have left the field of involvement in other than college academics.

Ms. Townsend has returned to college because she now feels it is time to devote to her studies now that her children have left home. She feels it is important to go through life without being labeled, no matter what kind of person may decide to concentrate.

Jill Silverstein, also a Return to College student, dropped out of college after one year because she "wasn't satisfied" with college. She feels that she needed to obtain some experience in the world outside academics. "I realize now that feeling that people 'haven't learned how to live' outside a school atmosphere and that many students don't know why they're here."

Along with pursuing her college degree by taking Art 192, American Art, and Anthropology of Southeast Asia, Ms. Silverstein is also self-supporting. She works in Madison, Wisconsin where she is a cook for a residential treatment center called "A Better Chance."

This program where a family owns their home to a dozen high school families in the inner city and allows them to live and attend school there.

Neither Ms. Townsend nor Ms. Silverstein enjoy the lecture courses. They feel it is essential to have the mutual interaction of seeing the teacher in a classroom. Both women miss the stimulation of the free thought among colleagues. Each woman feels she needs the feel for "the input and output" that is present in a more traditional college program.

Both Ms. Townsend and Ms. Silverstein feel "wiser" upon their return to college in ways that Townsend said she felt that they are better judges of their individual lives as college students and, despite rigorous schedules, feels she can tackle the pressures and studies of college courses.

PATRICIA HEARST

Due to the events discussed in Rolling Stone Magazine, the account which Patricia Hearst gave for her involvement in the S.L.A. before she was apprehended by the F.B.I. has been called into question. Ms. Hearst has stated that she had no motive for returning to college and that she never participated voluntarily in their activities. A Government report which imposed strict limits on campaign spending by individuals and political parties, the milk products are now exempt from these limits, even though they plan to use scientific polling to restrict the voter drives to districts that favor the candidates which the organizations are seeking to support.

At this time, the advisory rule applies only to the milk subsidiaries. If the commission's formal regulation, which will soon be written, follows last week's ruling and receives Congressional approval, it will spend unlimited amounts of money in getting out-of-state voters to register and get-out-the-vote drives.

The basis for this ruling is an attempt to increase citizen participation in the voting process. The rule becoming law, though, it will provide a means for wealthy individuals or groups to influence the elections. Last April, the Election Commission implemented the 1971 Campaign Finance Reform Act which imposed strict limits on campaign spending by individuals and political parties. The milk products are now exempt from these limits, even though they plan to use scientific polling to restrict the voter drives to districts that favor the candidates which the organizations are seeking to support.

Terrence Hallinan, Patricia Hearst's lawyer, said that the details of the affidavit came from an unidentified woman, and not from Miss Hearst. He added that after she had been subjected to terrifying and receding radical rhetoric, but when she read the affidavit "she didn't realize where it had signed right on my eyes."

This week a report is expected from the panel of court-appointed psychiatrists who have been examining Patricia Hearst. This report will then allow prosecutors to question her about the presently posed discrepancies. Miss Hearst is now being held by the San Francisco bank which was robbed in April without a witness. Conn. College wants YOU

by Lawrence Walters

After one gets accepted to Connecticut College, spends some time here and gets involved in college life, one tends to forget how one's presence here all came about. However, this is not quite true in all cases. In fact, for a junior in Harwood named Ken Crerar, he is just the opposite. Employed by the Admissions Office as a "student guide coordinator," Ken and a group of campus tour guides, Howard Weiner, have been working closely over the summer and fall months. During this time on many aspects of recruiting new students for Conn.

Admissions Guide Program is in full swing. There are 60 guides, twice as many as last year. This year a guide should get up to fifteen hours of training to become a "student guide," and "practically a walking encyclopedia."

Guides will have to know the college's history, statistics, information on Conn's academic programs, activities, and just general trivia about college life. Ken said that "can't describe the process for a day." In order to meet this need there will be weekday tours from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturdays.

Admissions Office Goals

One such goal for Conn's Admissions Office this year is to have a prospective student overnight program. This visits are two days a week will provide overnight stays for a potential student who is visiting Conn. This goal is for the Admissions Office is to travel around. Teams of one Admissions Officer and a student who is traveling from Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., to Boston, Mass., and at other college information functions.

This coming Monday, October 10, is Campus Day. This huge event, hosted by the Admissions Office, is a day when prospective students from Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, New York and other nearby states can come to Conn for a day. Ken Crerar stated, "Campus Day is a good opportunity for students to really see Conn." After a morning of campus tours, prospective students can attend various sessions in the areas of admissions, academic, social, and athletics.

An alternative method to a regular tour is the Admissions Office's new group information sessions. There will be one faculty member, one student, and one Admissions Office. 31st Alumni Council examines Changing winds at Conn. College

by Lea Sease

The 31st Annual Alumni Council was held at Connecticut College last weekend. Present for the weekend were alumni from all over the country. The primary purpose of the weekend was to allow alumni to return to their home areas and share the news.

The main events of Saturday were opened by a meeting of the executive board of the Alumni Association on Friday. Saturday's agenda began with continental breakfast and three speakers: Louise Ames, Priscilla Freeman, and John Mackinnon — President of Psychology and Department Chairman. The speakers dealt with a thematic topic: "Rescuing the Whirlwind."

Pre-Med Club Meeting: Tuesday, October 14.
Dr. Paul L. Chello will be speaking on "The Development of a Model for Research on the Treatment of Cancer." Dr. Chello is research associate of the Sloan Kettering Institute for Cancer Research and has a Ph.D. in pharmacology from Yale. All are welcome: 7:30, Bill 306.

Couple talks on Vietnam

Two American Friends Service Committee Representatives stationed in Saigon before the official U.S. withdrawal will give a firsthand account of the South Vietnamese situation on Tuesday, October 14. The talk will also give students a chance to learn about the problems of a country that is still very much with us.

Paul and Sophia Quinn-Judge, a husband and wife team, left Vietnam on July 30. Among the few Westerners who stayed behind in the collapse of the Thieu government last April, they have observed firsthand the effects of the war and restore the country after thirty years of war. Food, security, inflation, and unemployment have presented the most serious problems for this new regime.

The Quinns have returned to the Vietnamese, served for two years as administrators of a rehabilitation center for Vietnamese war veterans, and worked for the AFSC. The Center, established by the AFSC, is now run by the present government's Ministry of Health.

The Quinns, who left Vietnam in 1973-74 as volunteers of the Quinns, served as directors of the Friend's Center in Paris, France.

In 1972, both seamen were placed on self-defense by the present government in returning to the country to nonmilitary. They are told of the proud of themselves, says Sophia Quinn-Judge, "to be masters of their own country and it is their lives."

The Quinns cited two reasons for leaving South Vietnam: Their affiliation with the Quinns problem of the role of as outsiders. And, "after 20 years of foreign occupation," says Mr. Quinn-Judge, they need to organize their own community without the help of outsiders. "The couple also felt need to return "because we had In the city and we decided it was time to come back and talk about them."

The program sponsored by the AFSC and the Conn College Asia Club will be in the 401 p.m., Crusader-Williams Main Lounge.

Bicentennial group plans celebration

by Bruce E. Collin

With some 10,000 students from all sectors of the college community involved in the activities, the bicentennial program has begun to formulate events on campus which commemorate our nation's history. Robley Evans, chairman of the committee, outlined numerous programs which are intended to tell people something about the background of their college and the various dance festivals, lectures on New London's art and architecture, and theater productions are among the ideas which are currently being considered.

Career internship offers on-the-job training

by Frances Slack

For two weeks last spring, Conn, student LeRoy Jones worked for the Department of Public Service Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) in Washington, D.C. His clerk was to be a tutor in Civil Rights in an investigation of Discrimination and inequality in the Northern States of the United States. LeRoy, a sophomore Conn. student, was sitting in on meetings between some of Manhattan's most powerful real estate developers, on the other side of town, was assisting the editor of a national real estate magazine.

LeRoy, David and Frances are three of the 10 Career College juniors who participated in actual job settings. Students are matched with sponsoring alumni and friends of the college in five different areas: Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and Hartford-New Haven.

In addition to internships, the student takes part in a daily office routine; in others, he or she was given his own office. As an example, last year, one economics major spent a week-long internship touring the Southern New England Telephone Company, while another economics major spent a week-long internship at the New York City Office of Management.

In other groups, internships are offered in a wide range of fields. Last year's list included banking, fine arts, government, social work, and communications. This year, according to Rosanne Burke, Assistant Director, the placement office is tapping new sources, such as spouses or colleagues of alumni, in order to reach this range even wider.

For some students, the internship experience reaffirmed earlier plans they had already held. For others, the program had the opposite effect.

"Until last year, I had been wanting to be a lawyer," says David Korkin, "but my internship changed my mind. I saw that it is an exhausting job and I really make the challenging and creative decisions, and not the mechanical decisions."

Of course, not everyone learned something from his internship. Some students, for example, found that they were not ready for their internship. "The one thing is, you have to like your internship. I think it is very important," says the questionnaire, "What did you expect to gain from this internship?"

By tailoring the students' expectations more closely to what the company is willing to offer, and by expanding the number and number of internships available, the Placement Office hopes to have a better Internship program this year than ever before.

For any juniors interested in the Career Internship Program, there will be an informational meeting October 15 at 4:30, 106 Bill Hall.

"I always get dressed up for meals. They were about the same age as me, beautiful, sitting in their cashmere sweaters and camel hair coats, eating popovers."

In 1941, Frances married George Flynn, and left her job at Connecticut College in order to raise a family. Five children and fifteen years later, she returned.

"I always had a very positive attitude about the people who lived in the world."

by Francis Slack

Frances Flynn, benevolent mother-figure of Harris Refectory, always knows what's going on there, and has for the past ten years. Since 1966, her personal warmth and good nature, qualities obvious to anyone who has been in Harris, have made her popular among students here. Despite hours which are often long and boring, Frances, like others who are sometimes tedious, Mrs. Flynn, familiar to most students simply as "Mom Flynn," says she enjoys her work because of the people she can meet through it.

"I like to treat the students as though they were my own children," asserts Frances, "I just couldn't do it."

"I don't need to look for their negative sides."

Frances' relationship to the hundreds of hungry people who daily frequent the refectory is not a one-sided affair. For most of them, she is a bright spot in an otherwise impersonal experience.

"Frances doesn't have to see your ID,"

"They go through the line and she already knows your name.

The first of 11 children and a life-time resident of New London, Frances originally came to Connecticut College in 1933. At that time she lived on campus, in February, in order to be on hand for all three meals.

"To one ate buffet-style here that was hard to do,"

"I think they were."

"The largest dining room was in Thieves Hall, and working there was interesting. I think eating in a pleasant restaurant — minus the tips, of course,"

"To those days, the girls would always dress up for meals. They were about the same age as me, beautiful, sitting in their cashmere sweaters and camel hair coats, eating popovers."
Stately Lyman-Allyn
Is just a short walk away

by Fidelia

What could you say about another granite building on the campus of Connecticut College, and yet distinguish it from the other edifices? If you happen to be referring to the Lyman-Allyn Museum, then you had best retain the most praiseworthy of words for its description, among them: magnificent and fascinating. In the opinion of a mere art spectator, this structure is comparable to such notables and the Magician Museum of Fine Arts, the Isabella Stewart Gardner and Golf Art Museums in Boston and emits that touch of class found in few cultural centers. The privilege of maintaining this museum has been conferred upon Connecticut College and had undoubtedly enlarged the scope of this multifaceted campus.

Upon approaching the main entrance, you are overpowered by the grandiose pillars (Doric) columns supporting this massive structure. Before stepping over the threshold, you are greeted by two large flower pots, in the shape of half-rooms and overhanging the penetrations. To enter the museum at this point is detrimental to the completion of the overview of the exterior grounds. For, if one turns toward Route 95, one will see, too, the Allies family, and then the building's beckoning light stop. One must take a deep breath and encourage the transcendence of time and place to recall a vision of this guiding light at the bow of Captain Lyman's ship. At this point you turn to enter the museum.

As it is important to begin the tour at the source, one goes to the very fine art reference library. The appealing atmosphere is palpable, and the cool, green carpeting. This model library contains an extensive collection of books (more extensive than at Palmer) and an assortment of magazines ranging from Museum News to the Art Gazette of America. There is even a bulletin board just outside the library, listing latest events for the Art-collegiate community.

Across from the library is the Glassenberg Gallery, a sun-filled, cheery, and welcoming painting entitled Moody Monday (by C. Robert Perrin) has not the slightest effect of dimming this illuminating room. The next area of interest is on the other side of the museum. Here is a central gallery (but not the one's on either side) containing a variety of paintings, a collection of silver and a diverse group of crystal. The most impressive painting is of Mt. Etna, by the perfect romantic artist, Thomas Cole. In evaluating this painting, it is worth noting that his Exposition from the Garden of Eden has earned a space in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

According to the curator of the museum, Dr. Mayhew, an autographed tapestry (as one of them) is rarely found. To the far left on this floor is a gallery devoted to such notable painters as Benjamin West, Frederick Church and Connecticut's own John Trumbull. Particularly appetizing is a Still Life of Fruit by William H. Harrington, whose incredible depiction of detail not only stimulates appreciation, but the appetite as well.

In contrast to this room is the adjoining Miles Gallery of sculpture, vases, jewelry and pottery from Egypt, Greece, Rome and the Ancient Near East. One should refrain from touching the various objects d'art, especially the canopia jar, in which the principal intestines of the deceased were placed and buried with the mummy.

To discuss briefly the remaining rooms, there are the Powers, Primitive Art, Stuart and McDannel Galleries which I leave to the reader for further investigation. By mentioning the Budist Shrine in the Stamm Gallery, I hope to pique your latent desires to explore the museum. There is also the Alice Stowell Bishop Gallery, devoted to permanent studio space for adult's and children's classes.

Before bringing this brief tour to a close, it is only fitting to take you to the basement of the Lyman Allyn, for there sits the Doll House Exhibit. The most outstanding house was made by Harold Hawthorne and contains in its eleven rooms actual furniture of the 19th century in miniature. One can but stare in amazement and envy those dolls, or indeed, the clay babies of being eight inches tall...

Civilized men battle Nature in "Deliverance"

By Jim Diskant

John Boorman's Deliverance could be classified as anti- back-to-nature film, but it carries a greater significance; it is a story of primitive man versus civilized man. Four suburban business-men decide to pit themselves against the wildness during a weekend canoe trip, a trip which takes on much more significance than they had bargained for. Ditto continuing the early 70's trend of depicting graphic extremes of violence and racism, actually juxtaposing such extremes. James Dicey wrote the novel, and also the screenplay. On Lewis (Burt Reynolds) suggestion, three friends go on a canoe trip down a dangerous and inaccessible river in Georgia. Ed (Jon Voight) wants to return to the city once he realizes what is there ahead. Between Nature and the characters, the mountain men they find, the trip becomes extremely traumatic for all the men. Only two of them against elements and technology versus nature. The river and surrounding area will be invaded by a dam for a hydroelectric project.

The differences between primitive and civilized men are also emphasized; and can only be detected in an overcivilized, overanalyzed world of our own. We can see what these civilized men lose, and what primitive man must learn. Twice the men discuss their life, "There's something in the city we lost." "We didn't lose it, we sold it." And, "No matter what petty little problems may arise in the city, you'll never find us here." They would like to return to the tranquility of the woods, until they realize that it is really not so tranquil. Not only does Lewis break his leg, but the others are attacked by grizzly bears. The film is a parable of survival, and implies that man must work with Nature in order to survive. In the real world, no one can find us here. Through this experience, the viewer is "delivered" back to Nature and primitive man. This is a flaw in an otherwise excellent film, which the viewer should not accept as a story of delivered ones.

Dale's anniversary concert

Sucessfully presented

by Margie Katz

William Dale, Chairman of the department of music at Conn., celebrated his 25th year at Con. College with an extremely enjoyable piano recital Tuesday, Dec. 20. The Concert Hall was well-filled with students, faculty and friends starting this occasion. For his recital selections, Mr. Dale chose to repeat his first recital program at Conn.

Mr. Dale opened the recital with a performance of Scarlatti's Sonata in E major, K. 162. This was a fantastic opening number, not in the least unmusical, rendering of the work. Mr. Dale's technique has the clarity and evenness so essential in Scarlatti. These qualities were apparent in the Mozart Fantasy in C minor, K. 67, as well as in his ability to hear Mozart played with emotion, good taste, and consistency throughout. The performances were without any of the superficiality which distinguishes the amateur from the insightful artist.

Brahms Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Handel exhibited humor, thematic consistency, and a perfect blending of the musical idea throughout. Mr. Dale approached this challenging work as a smooth flowing mood, always in control of the music. The shift from gentle motion to intense drama which is the essential beauty of Brahms. We were aware of each component of the superb fugue, which took shape as a blend of form and highly emotional character. This performance came very close to perfection. However, there was some loss of control of notes and balance. However, as Mr. Dale gained confidence and skill, his playing was highly satisfying and true to Brahms' own spirit of intensity. Mr. Dale's Sonatina for Piano (1897-1966) Sonata for Piano was a real treat. Porter, a New Haven native, had much to offer on his preparation of this piece when Mr. Dale first performed it for a doctoral recital at Yale. The allegro molto opening movement was exciting and electric; the second movement intensely spiritual; the third movement an exercise in fantasy. Through a very contemporary tonality and rhythmic approach, the moods were highly recognizable. A joyous closing movement balanced the work. Mr. Dale's interpretation and technique were very clear here; technically this seemed the most brilliantly executed work on the program.

Ludis Tonalis, by Paul Hindemith, was surprisingly listenable. There was a good deal of dissonance here, in contrast to much of his music. Again, Mr. Dale showed a deep understanding of form and musical style through which the individual characteristics of each movement came alive. By far the most impressive in this recital were Continued On Page 9

1979 Judiciary Board candidates

David Stern
It has been my previous nature to shy away from student government elections due to the fact that they were usually extensions of the administration's desires. However, the Judiciary Board is a fair and just system set up by the students for the students. I believe that its ideals can be put into practice.

I have strong convictions about the enforcement of the Honor Code. Nevertheless, being a firm believer in school spirit, when I am confronted with cases of excessive rowdiness that cause more spirit than damage, my vote will be one of leniency.

I am looking out for the student's interests and if elected, I will provide unbiased decisions to all matters that come before the Judiciary Board. I've been on the receiving line too often to act in any other fashion. Thank you for your support.

Lina Goodkind
The rights and responsibilities granted to us as freshmen of Connecticut College are results of the democratic functions of the Judiciary Board. It is imperative that the students have a voice in forming their own codes of behavior. Since we as students have the privilege of judging our own actions, I feel that the representativeness of the Judiciary Board should maintain a great degree of objectivity and liability while reviewing the cases brought before the board. I see our freedoms as important aspects of our lives here and I am concerned that our perspectives are maintained through the laws of the Judiciary Board.

Judy E. Paskow
Connecticut College is a unique institution. Students can benefit not only from the generally open and friendly atmosphere which permeates the entire school, but also from the close student-teacher relationships which as possible to achieve in a college of this size.

One of the most important aspects of Connecticut College is the Honor Code. In order to maintain our school as a strong institution, dedicated to educating young men and women, socially and academically, it is essential that we live by this system. As it says in the description of the Honor System in the Judiciary Board Packet, the need for a Judiciary Board in an institution which follows an honor code arises out of the need for a unique system that is "honest" and verifies students' students should automatically adhere to an "honest" way of life.

Since Connecticut College has not yet attained a "utopian" state, we all must learn to live by the Honor System and to cooperate with the function of the Judiciary Board. Only then will Connecticut College achieve a stable system of well-educated, responsible young adults.

Serving on the Judiciary Board is a great responsibility that must be met by a person who has a good sense of judgment, a level head, the ability to make decisions, and who is willing to give up his time to serve the school community. If elected as Freshman Representative, I will do my best to take an objective approach and to make honest and just decisions in all cases.

Peter Clifford
Hello, my name is Peter Clifford. I am a freshman and a candidate for the Judiciary Board.

Everyone knows how the Judiciary Board works and its importance to members of our college community. Long speeches are really not necessary here, for we all know what this school needs and what Judiciary Board members should attempt to do.

I want members of the class of 1979 to know who I am as well as what I intend to do. Since the office of Judiciary Board requires time and effort, I will give my time and sincere effort, and since the board strives for open-minded and fair decisions, I will work to make these kinds of choices. I am certain that given the opportunity to be a member of the board I would effect beneficial results. This is really all that needs to be said.

Please consider your vote carefully as I have this election. Peter Clifford is willing to work.

Mitchell Halpern
My Fellow Freshmen!
We all share the common bond of matriculation. When a student inadvertently or overtly commits a "no-no" he or she is brought before the Judicial Board. We should all be grateful that Connecticut College students have the opportunities, protection, and responsibilities a Judicial Board offers.

I feel myself sufficiently prepared to take on the added responsibility of being one of the freshmen representatives on the Judicial Board of Connecticut College. I feel that my reflective nature will be an asset to the Board. Through my past experience on a Judicial Board, I know that my objective, conscientious, and energetic nature is necessary for a Board member. I feel that these attributes will add immeasurably to the efficiency and fairness of the Board.

Therefore, I ask the members of my class to support me in my quest for the office of freshman representative on the Judicial Board.

Anthony S. Harris
The Student Handbook states that the purpose of the Judicial Board is to be "responsible for the maintenance of the Honor Code." The word "maintenance" implies an impassive mechanism, while in actually the Honor System is based on people.

People and their beliefs are never quite the same. Therefore, an open mind is needed to fully absorb and understand those cases of the Judicial Board that can not be "fixed" by a set train of thought.

In a college as small as Conn., the individual can be recognized and stressed. When, either in...
tentionally or otherwise, the Honor Code is broken, the Board must be able to recognize the person as such and act... 'meet with De_a_n_W_. _C_u_r_r_i_e of HBS here on campus October 10 at the Crozier-Williams 211 to find out.

Venture

by Kate Maynard

As a participant in last year's college Venture program, Joan Tabachnik worked for a National Fisheries Service in Sandy Hook, New Jersey. She is one of four students who participated in last year's Venture program and are back on campus this year. Three others chose not to return.

Two of last year's students described their experience last year. Joan did marine biology lab work and spent a lot of time sorting plankton and pursuing other such jobs. She kept in touch with Conn. through weekly reports of what she was doing and is presently writing a paper that should qualify her for credit for some of her work at Sandy Hook.

Joan was also trained in darkroom and X-ray technique. She felt that her semester off helped her to further clarify what she would like to do after school. This is exactly the function the program is supposed to serve. According to the local director, Tabachnik, the student gains experience in a "real-life" working situation and can often be relieved by a semester off from the pressures and frustrations that build up in school life.

Another student, Letitia Mills, was working in the annex to the Library of Congress in Washington D.C. Though Letitia's job didn't work out as well as she had hoped (she was looking for a job where she could use her foreign language), she was very impressed with the way the Venture people assisted her in getting the job.

She first went to Ms. Bart just several months before the first semester ended and the program staff worked for almost that amount of time finding her the position, giving her pointers on how to handle her interview, etc.

Both students found the experience very rewarding. The program was recommended by them to any student in need of a change of pace or who finds college life at any particular time to be stagnating or stifling. Though the students are experiencing slight difficulties in re-adapting to school-life, both indicated that they felt more relaxed and ready to work after their semester out of school.

They emphasized that the coordinators of the program will go to "all means and ends" to help a student.

Admissions

to whom they would like to be interviewed by.

The last new thing planned by the Admissions Office is to travel to alumni groups in order to inform them of what Conn is doing and how it is making out. Alumni are usually interested in what is happening at Conn, so this program is a good method for keeping them up to date.

Flexibility and accessibility to all prospective students from everyone at Conn are the two main objectives which the Admissions Office are striving for. If all the Admissions Offices' programs run smoothly and result in successful conclusions, next year's freshman class should be one of the best informed about Connecticut College that Conn has ever enrolled.

Injuries plague dorm flag contests
But the games go on anyway

by Rich Kadane

"Straighten it! Straighten it out!"

Although they might seem otherwise, these are the cries of a person in pain, someone whose knee was damaged on the flag football grid just last week. As I watched him lope around a stretching machine I reflected for a moment and recalled my previous three years of experience on the football field here, recalling an array of broken hands, legs and noses, as well as pulled and sprained muscles — all unpleasant recollections. As the whistle sounded to restart play, memories of past violence were pushed aside in order to accommodate the game at hand and my own well-being.

The issue of the amount of violence in campus flag-football has grown to controversial levels in the midst of continuing injuries. Arguments persist about its effect on the field are homogenous and follow a trend of examination manifested by examples such as the recent Dave Forbes trial. (Forbes, a professional hockey player, faced charges linked to malicious intent and assault during a game but exculded them because of a hung jury.)

Then why play the game if participants receive injuries? Players wear no protective padding while they are exposed to a good deal of body contact; should this not be allowed?

Although these commonly asked questions point to the basic issue and make us aware of the injury risks, they overlook the reason for the football league's formation in the first place: to provide an organized outlet for those wishing to participate in that particular brand of football. Players realize that in spite of non-existent padding they will be bumping fully matured bodies at accelerated speeds.

Body contact contributes an intensity attraive to virtually all players, an intensity which is much closer to individual senses of competition. To do away with all body contact would, in effect, do away with the game on an organized basis, thus answering the arguments of those questioning the intensity of the sport.

The actual problem lies in the attitudes of the individual team. The intensity of competition should be determined, but many times is not, in respect of the opponent's own talents and approach to the game. If evaluation such as this were made automatically by teams, properly played flag-football game would be the result. This viewpoint represents the consensus of many of today's participants.

In the meantime, some players will suffer injuries with an understanding of the risk involved. But the risk issue is generally absent from actual body collision in that a large percentage of injury is due to quick pivots, diving, and falling.

Rules and modifications have been made over the last few years of familiarity with the nature of flag-football in its currently popularized form has increased. No longer can players leave their feet to block, a factor which has contributed to the absence of injury through contact. Injuries have been curbed further by disallowing direct hand-off into the line of scrimmage and prohibiting body holding when grabbing for flags. Other reforms such as the train of a regular staff of referees and a restructuring of the league under two new commissioners have resulted in the establishment of policies which stress cooling action when use purpose of any given game loses recognition. This progress marks a general appeal for the game on the part of the league's increasing ability to deal with the problems which lead to injuries.

College officials have stated that until a new, as equally sensible form of football can be agreed upon, the game will remain because of the level of response would in the case with sports such as soccer and field hockey. Judging from players' responses to the violent world on the campus gridiron, it would appear that football is here to stay for all its worth to individuals. Although people will die in automobiles, they will continue to drive, and although the game may be banned through official directive, flag-football, advocates will continue to play the game. Whether we all win or lose is decided by participants and onlookers alike in regard to the questions being raised today.

Club sports proposal
Returned for revision

by Anne Robilliard

The final decision on what to do about club sports has still not been reached through it is being discussed weekly at College Council. After reviewing the Physical Education Department's proposal submitted by Mr. Luke, the Council recommended that certain changes be made.

The only major revision of the proposal concerns the make-up of the council. The council would have consisted of the Chairman of the Physical Education Department, the coordinator of Women's Athletics, representatives of all active clubs — either their president or another officer — and a representative of the Student Government Association.

The proposed change is to have the Physical Education Student Advisory Committee and two members of the Physical Education Department, one male and one female, form the committee. The reasoning behind this is that since these people are already familiar with the clubs and their needs, it will be easier for them to function as the Club Council. The other changes were made to wording of certain sections of the proposal.

The proposal with the suggested changes, will once again be on the College Council Agenda at today's meeting.

Charlie Cissell puts the move on.

Camels fail to score

by Bear Kebac

In all epic confrontations one side must emerge as victors, the others as losers. Example — Owen Fragale is a certain young co-ed, "With curves like those you'd make some pitcher," to which she responded, "Maybe, so far I've kept you scoreless in the late innings." Owen commented. "But in Fenway, like Harkness, anything can happen," however unflustered she answered "Yes, but we're playing in my ball park, Owen, and you just struck out."

It seemed on Saturday that the Camels were the Owls in a close battle, a very close battle, losing 2-1 to the University of Hartford. As coach Bill Lessig said, "It was a tough loss when you consider that we dominated the game. It was just two momentary freak mistakes which beat us. We had many scoring chances but unluckily couldn't produce. I was pleased with Captains John Moore, who played flawlessly and John Perry, who showed good midfield play, but someone has to tell Bear to quit watching the ballgirls. Peter Reich, Bill Farrell, and Hugo Smith played strong defense. Steve Litwin, Charlie Cissell, Keith Harley, Scott Carney and David Kelley, who scored on a penalty kick, all had good shots on net. It's only a matter of time before we explode offensively. Gosnell and Anderson played well as goalies but have to start working more with the defense. The future is optimistic with the depth of players such as Rosenthal, Cates, Such, Rush, Griswold, and Roosevelt. "Nice wrap-up, coach," said Bernetti. To which Guy Morris commented, "With a quote like that, I'd cement my mouth shut and slip peanut butter through a straw."

A female spectator was heard to say to one of the players, "If you can't score on a Saturday after trying for 90 minutes, why should I even give you a chance after only 7 minutes on a Tuesday." And Billy Briggs added, "Bullwinkle is still a dope", to which Eva Fellows commented "Come up and quote me sometimes."

Sailors enter finals

by Dawn Wheatley

At a recent race at Harvard, the Connecticut College sailing Team won the Bliss Trophy, which means they are division champions and entitled to compete in the National Collegiate Finals. The team got off to a slow start, placing eighth out of eight at URI, eighth out of eleven at Tufts, and sixth out of seven in a September race at Harvard. In the October 4 race at Harvard they placed first out of five. They finish up their season with two races in New Haven and another race at Tufts.

The team practices Monday through Thursday at the Coast Guard Academy. The 45 members, most of whom are beginners, use 12's in practice and 470's, 420's, Larks, and Incoructa at Regattas. There is a weekly meeting on Tuesday nights at 7:30, usually in Fanning, for instruction for beginners and review for experienced members.

J.V. Camels

by Lee Barnes

Shut out

The J.V. soccer team opened the season on a disappointing note in September by losing a 4-0 decision to Naval Prep Academy. There really isn't much to say after a game like this — the Camels were totally outplayed by the Jr. Midshipmen and played a disgruntled type of soccer throughout most of the game. It is obvious that the Camels did not play their best soccer in this game.

Connecticut College Women's Swim Team needs more swimmers to make their team complete. Come practice with us. Every night 7 p.m. There are many students at Conn who would make an excellent addition to the team.
Women lose 3 straight
In field hockey contests

by Allison Macmillan

The women's field hockey team scored an upsetting hat-trick last week losing three games in a row. Have the Camels hit a drought? In spite of the team's efforts to come through with at least one victory they just didn't have the 'jump' to do it.

The team suffered their first loss on Tuesday against UConn with a final score of 5-3. Unfortunately they had two minor injuries to accompany the defeat. After Tuesday's upset, the Camels were determined to drink up Mt. Holyoke on Wednesday. Even though Conn had the home advantage, Tuesday's score was repeated.

The Camels were home again on Thursday to play Trinity. Sarah Burchell drove in two goals and Buffie Ashforth scored one. However, Conn could not keep it together and keep the play on their opponent's end of the field, and Trinity managed to score four goals by the end of the game.

Conn. loses control in a recent hockey game.

Harriers win at home

by Barbara Hricko

Conn's cross country team scored another victory at home, topping Manchester, in an unofficial match, by a score of 21-31. The normal cross country course starts near the boathouse and continues through the woods. Both teams warmed up here, but due to the poor weather conditions, it was changed to another course which is mainly roads.

The Camel harriers were not really threatened by the opposition and were able to turn in some fine times for the 4.7 mile course. Captain Marc Gol-tesdener set a new school record, coming in first with a time of 22:33. Teammates following him were Ben Jones (23:20); Jon Marcus (23:32); Mike "Bat" Weaver (31:56); Kevin Durkin (36:34); and Ben Sprague (36:30).

The workouts of Mark Connolly and Coach Luce are effective in preparing the harriers for their meets. Their interval training consists of running short distances at quick paces which increase the endurance and stamina needed for competition.

Unfortunately, the team is plagued by injuries this early in the season. Sam Gibson is out with water on the knee, and Jon Marcus, Peter Clason, and Michael Dipace have sprained ankles.

Conn. mixed doubles team wins

In weekend open tennis tournament

If you happened to have passed the north tennis courts the weekend of October 4, you noticed some familiar and some not so familiar Trojans battling for first-place honors in the Connecticut College Open Tennis Tournament. The tournament was open to Connecticut College personnel and others from New London and the surrounding areas. The total tournament draw included 63 people.

Representing Connecticut College were the following: Jennifer Johnston, Hilary Henderson, Kathy Sorley, Lynda Bogel, Sheryl Yearley, Michael Harvey, Jim Dicker, Ethan Wolle, Larry Yahia, Ken Abel, Charles Morrison, Wynne Bohrnon, Peter Kruk, Tom Udisn, Dave Rosenfeld, and Tom Howland.

In the finals of the men's singles, George Ulrich defeated Wynne Bohrnon (6-3, default). In the women's singles, Marty Morse defeated Candy Cisco (6-3, 6-3). In the only doubles event held, mixed doubles, Wynne Bohrnon and Sheryl Yearley defeated Fred LaLiberte and Dottie O'Neill (3-6, 6-3).

Lambdin rallies for flag tie

by Stve Price

Despite the uncertainty about the weather, the schedule, and or not the equipment would arrive, the past week produced a full slate of games for the Harvards. In most exciting game of the year thus far, Lambdin rallied to beat Morrisan14-14. No, that wasn't a typographical error. Remember Harvard beating Yale 22-22 a few years back? Well, with the crowd standing three deep along the sidelines, quarterback Ted "I want to die with my flags on" Rifkin threw a touchdown pass to center Mike Duggan with thirty seconds remaining in the game to give the underdog Lambdin the victory ... I mean it. It was a fitting conclusion to a game that saw powerful Morrison jump out to a 14-0 lead only to be thwarted the rest of the way by a determined Lambdin defense.

The referees also deserve a word of praise for keeping this hard fought battle under control.

In other North Division action, Wright won its first game of the season 34-26 at Providence as Bruce Warriner knelt and scored for the game's only touchdown. Unfortunatedly Lambdin drowned by Hamilton 35-0 led by quarterback Adam Schneider, who passed for two touchdowns and ran for two more. Lambdin, led by new quarterback Tom Deedy's three touchdowns, easily defeated Wright 36-0.

Lambdin is 7-0 and towing to its second straight conference game against Harkness with a formidable 42-7 over K.B. as quarterback Jim Briggs had touchdown runs of 79 and 50 yards. The touchdown run was 37 yards and scored for a third straight over Freeman-Windham 37-7 by Tom Bells. (37-7) paced by Tom Bells' three touchdowns. Freeman-Windham's lone score came on a spectacular passing play from quarterback Andy Hanley who passed to end Paul Sanford, who made one of those diving, parallel to the goal line catches that are usually reserved for NFL highlights. The Quad also stayed unbeaten as the Harvards defeated J.A. 29-13 with Robby Roberts and Walter Palmier each scoring twice.

The divisional races are starting to take shape and it appears as if there will be three teams fighting for two playoff spots in each division. Lambdin, Morrison, and the Harvards look to be the contenders.

The referees also deserve a word of praise for keeping this hard fought battle under control.

We don't believe in 'SALES' at the Stereo Lab...

We believe in the honest philosophy of selling high-quality components at fair and realistic prices. We do not believe in inflationary mark-ups. We believe in the true spirit of a bargain: a deal that is lower in price than what we previously paid, not a 'sale' that is lower in price than what it normally retails for.

Not only does this philosophy make us a more appealing store to you, the consumer, but it also makes us more business-savvy. We keep a close eye on the market. We buy particular components at cheaper prices than we previously paid and are consequently able to sell them at a lower cost.

For example: Pioneer's SA-8100 integrated stereo amplifier (rated at 40 watts RMS, 8 ohms at 20-20,000 Hz) that normally retails for $359.00 is now available for $259.00, a savings of $100.00 or the Pioneer TX-8100 AM/FM stereo tuner previously sold for $279.00 can now be purchased for $179.00, a savings of another $100.00 (offer good while the supply lasts).

So, if you're in the market for a bargain, this could be your chance to save $200.00 (both available for $438.00) and take advantage of a bargain that is not a sale.
