CONNECTICUT COLLEGE

Annual Report 2015-2016

|| From the President

The academic year 2015-16 was a significant one for Connecticut College as we launched a new curriculum, made improvements to the campus landscape, and developed a new strategic plan. It was also a year in which we garnered national recognition for both the Charles E. Shain Library renovation and our ongoing initiatives in teaching and learning.

A commitment to rigorous inquiry, openness, and collaboration has been a hallmark of Connecticut College since our founding. It was this commitment that led our faculty to do what for many other institutions would have been impossible: transform our general education requirements into a model curriculum for the 21st century. The resulting program, called Connections, is a bold new venture in integrative education, reflecting our faculty's ingenuity as well as their desire to foster the kind of educational environment that will allow all people to thrive and make a difference.

This report offers the stories of several faculty members who are contributing to that environment in unique ways through their research, teaching, and policy work on campus and beyond.

Such scholarly productivity has been bolstered by the Joy Shechtman Mankoff Center for Teaching & Learning, which has provided critical support in the work of building Connections. Through the center, our faculty have piloted new ideas and approaches, honed their craft, and challenged one another to experiment. At the same time, they have drawn inspiration from our students, whose diverse experiences inform and enrich our educational culture. The New York Times recently highlighted the work of the center and our faculty as models of excellence in undergraduate teaching.

Connections has garnered similar recognition. Grants totaling $3.7 million from The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, The Christian A. Johnson Endeavor Foundation, The Conservation and Research Foundation, and the National Endowment for the Humanities are providing critical support for the development of the new curriculum, which officially launched this year with the class of 2020. Connections received favorable notice in pieces published in Inside Higher Education and The Chronicle of Higher Education. Meanwhile, our newly renovated Shain Library, which continues to play a central role in fostering academic excellence, won six major design awards and was highlighted in a feature by The Associated Press on the changing face of college libraries.

Other critical spaces on campus have extended the support for teaching and learning. In the summer, we enhanced one of the oldest and most important sites for student engagement beyond the classroom, with interior and exterior renovations to Unity House, the College's multicultural center. A new road and enhanced pathways and lighting have made this essential resource both a more visible and a more vital campus destination. The project foregrounds the effort not only to enhance support for our diverse student body but also to make the understanding of race, identity, and difference even more central to our educational mission. Leading this effort is our new dean of institutional equity and inclusion, John McKnight, who joined the College in July.

Grants totaling $3.7 million are providing critical support for the development of the new curriculum, which officially launched this year with the class of 2020.

By far the most comprehensive project we undertook in the past academic year was the development of a new strategic plan for Connecticut College. An inclusive planning process involving the entire community—students, faculty, staff, alumni, parents, trustees and community partners—led to rich discussions about the College's distinctive past, current challenges, and future aspirations. Those conversations converged around three strategic priorities: achieving greater academic distinction; creating a more robust student experience; and supporting a just and sustainable College. The plan's goals and objectives will guide our operations over the next decade, with the aim of advancing the distinction of the College, improving its standing, and stewarding it toward a second distinguished century.

We will continue to support these ambitions through prudent fiscal management. Evidence of our discipline can be seen in the financial information included in this report. The College ended the fiscal year with a balanced budget that has allowed us to set aside almost $2 million to support Connections over the next five years. In a year of volatile market activity, our endowment had a challenging yet still respectable investment performance, closing the year at $263 million. Moody's Investors Service recently reconfirmed our A2 rating with a stable outlook. All in all, Connecticut College's financial position remains strong, ensuring our good standing both now and in the future.

Trustees, alumni, and parents have been essential to our success. This report concludes with an honor roll of donors, and I, too, want to conclude by thanking all of you for your continued support of Connecticut College. The projects and plans completed in the past year set us up for even greater things to come. I look forward to another productive year.

The Division of Cells

PROFESSOR MARTHA GROSSEL AND HER STUDENTS ARE GETTING TO THE ROOT OF WHAT CAUSES CANCER

Biology Professor Martha Grossel's work examines something that is central to the human experience:

Cancer.

Grossel specializes in cell cycle regulation, and her research focuses on understanding what causes unchecked cellular division. Studying something so integral to solving perhaps the greatest medical mystery of modern times is satisfying to the professor and exhilarating for her students.

"We do really basic research on what triggers a cell to divide. And if we can understand that, then we can try to stop it," Grossel said. "Basically, cancer is a just a cell that doesn't have the right controls on it. It stops acting the way it should."

A number of students have told Grossel they came to Connecticut College because of her work.

"Students want to learn about cancer. And the reason they want to learn about it is that cancer has touched all of us," Grossel said.

"We know our students want to make a difference in the world, and people who are good at science and math see this as a place where they can. They're excited to do cancer research in a well-established lab."

Once they're on campus, students at Conn quickly appreciate the close contact they have with faculty, which wouldn't be possible at larger institutions. Moreover, Grossel is engaged in the

- In 2015, Grossel was awarded a $412,470 grant from the National Institutes of Health's National Cancer Institute. It was her second NCI grant. (Her first NIH grant was for $419,375.)
- "Big-time research on a small campus," a feature article about Grossel's work, was published by The Day.
- Grossel worked with a team of core faculty to develop a new Connections Pathway in public health.
- *Grossel mentored three students in the Sickle Cell Disease National Challenge from The National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. Joseph P. lab and in the classroom, and one enhances the other.

"I really think we have a terrific mix here," she said. "Studies have shown that science students at liberal arts colleges do so well because they have this close relationship with a mentor. They see firsthand from us what we're doing. That's what makes the science training here different and better in many ways than at a big research institution."

Anthony Guerrero '16 began working with Grossel in the summer of 2014 and had the opportunity to present research with her at an American Society for Cell Biology conference in Philadelphia. Performing high-level research at such an early stage in his academic career, he said, has made him stand out among peers from other colleges and universities.

"Not many undergraduate students get the chance to conduct hands-on research in a laboratory,” Guerrero said. “Dr. Grossel has been a very supportive and impactful mentor to me.”

Grossel has helped keep Conn in the forefront by earning $1.4 million in grants. Another measure of her success is that to date, 21 students have participated in her cancer research. Of those students, 33 percent have completed or are enrolled in doctorate programs; another 33 percent have earned medical, veterinary, dental or nurse practitioner degrees; and 25 percent are pursuing careers in science or teaching.

“Science is hard. Often, you don’t have anything to show for your hard work at the end of the day—or the week, or the month, or the year. I love solving the puzzle, but it can be challenging,” she said.

“Training students is the opposite. They’re so appreciative, and they learn even if a result doesn’t work out the way you had hoped it would. They’re thrilled to tackle almost any problem.” ■

History From the Bottom Up

PROFESSOR JAMES DOWNS IS UNCOVERING LOST AND FORGOTTEN HISTORIES

James Downs, an associate professor of history and interim director of the American Studies Program, has won a number of fellowships and awards, including being named a distinguished lecturer in 2014 by the Organization of American Historians.

But the surpassing honor—both as a personal achievement and as a measure of Connecticut College’s success—was winning in 2015 a New Directions Fellowship from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. Downs was the only winner of the fellowship from a small liberal arts college and the first professor at Conn ever to win the award.

The $216,000 grant enabled Downs to study a new field—medical anthropology—for a year at Harvard University.

With this training, Downs is conducting exciting new research on how epidemiology gained scientific validity when doctors responded to cholera outbreaks among freed people in the American South, as well as the Caribbean, Europe and Asia.

“For me, history is less about producing knowledge for the sake of scholarly debate and more about uncovering lost and forgotten histories of people,” said Downs.

Downs uncovered these forgotten histories in his book Sick From Freedom: African-American Illness and Suffering During the Civil War and Reconstruction. In writing this book, he uncovered the history of how many enslaved people, at the moment of emancipation, became sick and died.

After a 10-year study of more than 500,000 records, Downs was the first to document a smallpox epidemic among newly freed American slaves that left hundreds of thousands dead.

“The Civil War produced the largest biological crisis of the 19th century,” Downs said. “Soldiers were infected with smallpox in a few scattered instances, but emancipation triggered widespread movement among ex-slaves that accelerated the spread of the virus. Just as the slaves were getting their first taste of freedom, they were getting sick and dying by the thousands.”

It’s one of the bitterest ironies in American history, and yet the story went untold for nearly 150 years. Downs book Sick From Freedom gave historians a new perspective on the Civil War. It was widely reported by popular media; The New York Times ran a story about it on the front page of the Arts section.

Researching a previously unreported epidemic got Downs thinking about another widely reported one: the outbreak of HIV in the 1980s.

“Historians, journalists, public health officials and even gay people often argue that the virus spread due to the sexual libertine world created by gay liberation in the 1970s,” Downs said. “Based on many years of research in community center archives, I discovered that this was not the case.”

Instead, as Downs argues in his new book, Stand

By Me: The Forgotten History of Gay Liberation, the epidemic may have been responsible for creating a false picture of sexual libertinism in this period, a view that ends up obscuring the actual cultural history of gay liberation. As Downs explains, most gay people in the 1970s were less interested in challenging or gaining affirmation from the political establishment than they were in “creating a culture of their own, with their own churches, newspapers and neighborhoods.”

With his new training in medical anthropology, Downs is contributing to the College’s initiative to develop a program in public health and is expanding his teaching on topics including slavery and emancipation, the history of medicine, and historical methods. He is also well on his way to finding new intersections between history, science and culture.

“There is so much more to uncover, so much more to write,” he said. ■

- Downs conducted field research at the British National Archives and the British Public Library in London, the Kilmainham Gaol Museum in Dublin, and the New Orleans Public Library and Tulane Medical School in New Orleans for his upcoming book, The Laboring Dead: From Subjugation to Science, which is under contract with Harvard University Press.
- Downs’ newest book, Stand By Me: The Forgotten History of Gay Liberation, was reviewed by the San Francisco Chronicle and The Boston Globe, among others. The Globe said Downs “capably blends authority and warmth in this thoughtful reexamination of an era.”
- Downs served as a consultant for the PBS series, Mercy Street. This season will be set in a black refugee camp and draws heavily from Downs’ book, Sick From Freedom.

Public Sociology

PROFESSOR AFSHAN JAFAR'S COLLABORATIVELY DESIGNED COURSES HELP STUDENTS DEVELOP AUTONOMY AND ASK THE RIGHT QUESTIONS

In an age when students have a plethora of information at their fingertips—and a screen in front of them at most times—it's easy to imagine the difficulty of designing a course that not only interests students, but also engages them.

Associate Professor of Sociology Afshan Jafar discovered that one approach is to make students part of the process, in what's called collaborative course design. To open up her midlevel sociology class to more participation from students, Jafar had the students design the course with her from day one. She gave her students autonomy.

"In my collaboratively designed course, I learned that students fear lack of structure much more than I realized," said Jafar, whose specialties include globalization, transnational women's movements, gender, media and the body.

"When you take away that safety net of step-by-step instructions, students are hesitant. But once they are encouraged to 'embrace confusion' and take risks, the results can be inspiring for students and professor alike."

Jafar recently published an article about teaching collaboratively designed courses in Teaching Sociology, published by the American Sociological Association. In her piece, she discussed the three main themes that emerged in her students' feedback.

"There were higher levels of student engagement, personal accountability and student empowerment."

In addition to her pedagogy research, Jafar's

60 Number of faculty members engaged in innovative residence hall programs for students through the College's Residential Education Fellow Program scholarship covers what she calls “public sociology.” She has authored three books, she blogs for Inside Higher Ed and she is a regular contributor to The Guardian. A video of her TEDxConnecticutCollege talk “Progress and Women’s Bodies” has been viewed more than 10,000 times.

Expanding her research on the body and globalization, Jafar is currently studying TV commercials in South Asia that advertise skin-lightening creams. She’s trying to understand the relationship between ideas of progress, cosmopolitan identity and racial representation.

In a similar vein, she’s researching representations of femininity in Disney films, asking, “Are contemporary Disney movies as progressive as we think?” Looking closely at the animated characters in “Frozen,” for example, Jafar comes to a conclusion that upends much popular commentary.

For Jafar, though, her work always returns to the classroom, which is one reason she won Connecticut College's Helen Mulvey Faculty Award for offering classes that challenge students to reach unanticipated levels of academic achievement.

In a collaborative environment, she strives to empower her students so they can become active learners and scholars.

"Seeing themselves as co-creators enables students to be more direct with me and have a level of openness that comes from not seeing me as the 'all-knowing-professor,'" she explained. As one student said, "This method of teaching allows for a very trusting classroom environment filled with learning, laughter and intensity."

Through this collaborative coursework, Jafar's students gain habits of mind that will serve them beyond the classroom.

"The lasting message is for them to be involved in their education, and to not be shy about questioning things. That's something that students take with them beyond college," she said. ■

Building Futuristic Apps

PROFESSOR JAMES LEE AND HIS STUDENTS ARE USING TECHNOLOGY TO IMPROVE LIVES

The research interests of Sangyoon (James) Lee sound futuristic, exotic, sci-fi and remote:

- Avatars—Electronic images that represent, and are manipulated by, a computer user.
- Virtual reality—An artificial environment experienced through sensory stimuli provided by a computer, in which one's actions partially determine what happens in the environment.
- Realistic skin rendering—Making animated skin look real.

It's clear Lee, an assistant professor of computer science, can get students' attention. But they're doing more than gaming, right?

Consider this: Lee, who's from South Korea, founded Connecticut College's Computer Graphics and Virtual Reality Laboratory in 2014—with five student researchers. The lab's projects include:

- An avatar mobile phone intervention designed to help HIV-infected African-American men with their care.
- An interactive campus activity map aimed at letting Connecticut College students and faculty know in real time when places such as the library are busiest.
- Developing applications including a barcode scanner for medical aids for the Google Glass wearable computing device.

MORE ON JAMES LEE

- The National Institutes of Health awarded $450,547 to Lee and research colleagues at the University of Illinois at Chicago for the project “May I Help You? ... An Avatar Health Concierge for HIV-Infected African-American MSM.”
- Five of Lee’s students presented research at the Undergraduate Poster Exhibition and Research Session for the Consortium for Computing Sciences in Colleges—Northeast Region. They presented three works: “Attentional Costs of Different Notification Types,” “Engaging Students with Adaptive Learning” and “Real-Time Virtual Window Simulation.”
- Lee served as a core member of the working group that developed the new Connections Sustainability and Social Justice pathway.

There’s more going on in Lee’s classroom than really cool animation—like enhancing life through computer graphics and visualization.

“Our approach is to ask: What would be the easier way, the cost-effective way?” Lee said.

The app for HIV-positive men, now in its second year of development, is a prime example.

During a visit to the doctor, or at the time of discharge from a hospital, patients are often given extensive information about what to do going forward: how and when to take their medications, or what diet to follow. But those sessions are often brief, and the information might be complicated. If patients don’t follow proper protocols, the risk of a health setback increases. Getting back to the doctor to clarify information might not be practical or affordable.

That’s where Lee’s app can fill a gap.

“We are not trying to replace human expertise. The goal is more about how we can supplement limited resources,” Lee said.

An avatar can provide information at a patient’s pace, and the information can be reviewed. In fact, an app might be even more effective than the patient himself. If, for example, the patient records side effects in the app, the data might be more persuasive and helpful than what a patient tells a doctor.

Moreover, an avatar is capable not only of dispensing medical expertise, but of even offering a joke or two—creating a pleasant experience that in turn improves the chances that patients will stay on their medication.

Clearly, it’s more than entertainment.

“It’s a very exciting project for me and my students, because they are using technology to help make people’s lives better,” said Lee. ■

Theater of the Mind

TEACHING IS A WORK OF ART FOR PROFESSOR KENNETH PRESTININZI

Associate Professor of Theater Kenneth Prestininzi aims to blend his stage work with his teaching in a way that enhances both passions, and ultimately provides a richer experience for his students.

“It’s important not to see them as separate and competing,” said Prestininzi, who is a playwright, director, producer and dramaturge.

“The work that I do with students continues to enliven me, and keeps me fresh and honest to the original impulse of learning and making theater for the public. What I’m teaching the students is how to enter the public square, how to be part of the larger conversation. No one creates art in a vacuum and no individual makes a piece of art alone.”

Because of Prestininzi’s ongoing work, actors and playwrights from New York and Boston, and as far away as San Francisco, New Orleans and Chicago, visit his classroom. And his students visit stages from New York to California.

“As teachers, we introduce students to artists,” said Prestininzi, who previously was the acting chair of playwriting at the Yale School of Drama and a Pembroke fellow at Brown University.

“We have this great library in our lives—who we’ve read, who we’ve been exposed to—and introducing the students to the great range and power of artists is one of the things I can do for them.”

MORE ON KENNETH PRESTININZI

- Prestininzi directed Ugmo and Eenie Go Down the Ruski Hole, based on Dostoevsky's Notes From Underground, at Dixon Place, an experimental theater and community space in New York City, in October 2015.
- Prestininzi is a resident playwright at NewDramatists.org, an organization that supports playwrights.
- Prestininzi is the artistic director of Brown/Trinity Playwrights Repertory Theatre in Providence, Rhode Island.
- One of Prestininzi's students, Misao McGregor '18, won the LGBTQIA Center's Singular Best Art Dealing with Gay Experience award for her work, Dandelions Conquer.

The symmetry is mutually beneficial. When director Prestininzi opened The Totalitarians in New Orleans and San Francisco, instructor Prestininzi was working on the play with students in his acting classes.

At the same time, original work is a priority. Graduating seniors in 2015, for example, produced three original plays and an original solo performance. The commitment to original work is a change of direction for the theater department. Before Prestininzi arrived, students routinely produced the work of established playwrights, rather than their own.

Prestininzi also values his interaction with professors from other disciplines and how it enhances the experience of his students.

“To be an informed artist, you do need to understand the world from many perspectives,” he said. “The danger of working in the arts or theater is that you’re only talking to other artists.

At Conn, I'm routinely in conversations and collaborations with other disciplines. It's in Conn's DNA."

For Prestininzi, a liberal arts college like Conn is similar to the theater.

"A small liberal arts college says what theater says—your learning, your being in the world is about understanding relationships." ■

What Motivates Kids to Learn?

PROFESSOR JENNIFER FREDRICKS IS COMBATTING DISENGAGEMENT IN K-12 SCHOOLS

Teaching excellence means going beyond understanding how students learn and getting to the “why.”

“I’m interested in why kids do anything, positively or negatively,” said Human Development Professor Jennifer Fredricks.

Fredricks is an educational and developmental psychologist whose research focuses on school engagement, motivation, extracurricular participation, adolescent development and parent socialization. One of her roles is serving as faculty director of the Holleran Center for Community Action and Public Policy, which advances teaching, learning, research and community collaborations.

Her work is aimed at helping kids long before they contemplate college. To this end, Fredricks is following more than 2,000 students in third through 10th grades over a two-year period with a particular focus on math and science. She’s asking: What types of teaching methods connect with students? Do kids learn better by working in groups? Why do some students lose interest in their studies? How do family factors play a role?

“For much of history, teacher-directed education—a teacher lecturing to students—has been the model for classroom learning. Now, education is moving more and more toward a student-centered approach, with a focus on projects, group work and personal, individualized learning,” Fredricks said.

MORE ON JENNIFER FREDRICKS

- Fredricks published five peer-reviewed articles in scholarly journals this year; another four have been accepted for publication.
- Fredricks co-edited a special issue on engagement for the journal Learning and Instruction.
- With a $20,000, two-year Students at the Center Distinguished Fellowship from Jobs for the Future, Fredricks joined leaders in education policy, practice and research from around New England in a new research collaborative to investigate, evaluate and implement meaningful change in the area of student-centered learning.
- Fredricks testified to support Connecticut Senate Bill 381: An Act Establishing a Task Force to Study School Climate.
- On campus, Fredricks developed and facilitated an engaged scholarship seminar for 18 faculty and staff interested in developing or revising community learning courses.

“There is a lot of anecdotal evidence that it works, but I want to elevate the research, create strong models for classroom instructors and help policymakers make evidence-based decisions.”

She is a co-principal investigator with colleagues at the University of Pittsburgh in this National Science Foundation-funded longitudinal study. The implications are important, Fredricks said, because 40 to 60 percent of kids report disengagement from school.

Fredricks said that if kids don’t care about school, they don’t participate and they don’t learn. If teachers and parents can keep their kids engaged, the kids are more likely to stay in school, earn higher grades and attend college. Conversely, disconnected students are more likely to show problem behaviors.

Fredricks’ work has gained national notice.

In 2015, she was awarded a fellowship from the William T. Grant Foundation that provided a 17-month residency at Connecticut Voices for Children. And in 2016, she was among researchers, practitioners and policymakers awarded fellowships from Jobs for the Future, a national nonprofit that builds educational and economic opportunity for underserved populations.

Being at the forefront of teaching excellence and student engagement has served Fredricks in her own classroom. In her courses on adolescent development, child and family policy, children's rights, and social policy analysis in urban America, Fredricks teaches students to use knowledge of human development to create environments that support the needs of children and families.

Adapting what she has discovered in her research, Fredricks now turns more over to students, using hands-on learning, community projects and group presentations to increase engagement.

"I strive to be more of a facilitator than a leader in class. I've found in my pedagogical research that students like having more ownership over what they're learning," she said. ■

Honor Roll of Giving

A liberal education at Connecticut College is founded on the belief that involvement in the world is essential for a student's future success. Because of the commitment and generosity of the entire Connecticut College community, the 2015-2016 Connecticut College Fund reached a record $5.9 million with total cash gifts of nearly $18.5 million. To all those listed in the following pages, please accept our sincerest thanks. With your support, the College is preparing the next generation of global leaders.

AD ASTRA SOCIETY

The Ad Astra Society honors donors whose giving has reached $1,000,000 or more over the course of their lifetime. Ad Astra donors are commemorated in the Ad Astra Garden at the top of Tempel Green. Created in 1996 by Emeritus Trustee Susan Eckert Lynch '62 in honor of her mother, the garden features stone benches surrounding a sundial fountain. The names of Ad Astra members are engraved on the benches as a permanent tribute to their extraordinary generosity and dedication to the College.

The information contained in this annual report is derived directly from data managed by the Office of Advancement Services at the College. The office has made every effort to ensure that the information is up to date and correct, but with any compilation of this magnitude, errors are possible. Should any errors be communicated to us, the office will work to correct any and all such information in the College's database, in the online version of this report and in future communications.
