New Judicial Body Proposed

By Kenneth Lanklin

A student smashes seven windows in Harkness. Someone saw him leave Harkness with a baseball bat. Several people confirmed this student was roaring drunk earlier in the evening. The incident is brought before the Judiciary Board (J-Board) and it is ruled the incident is not a J-Board case; the vandal goes unpunished. Why? Because a J-Board case cannot be made on circumstantial evidence.

In order to deal with such cases as the hypothetical one cited above, J-Board and SGA have collaborated on a proposal which recommends that a new administrative - student committee be established to handle those cases that are not under J-Board's jurisdiction. The proposal was brought before the SGA general assembly on October 6th, and will be presented to the dorms for a student vote tomorrow night, Wednesday October 13th.

The following is the proposal as received from Joe Cooper, chairman of J-Board:

The Administration currently has the power to investigate, discuss, and make decisions on how to handle certain social incidents that do not constitute Judiciary Board cases. The power they hold to assert these three functions cannot be sufficiently utilized because it places both the Administration and the Judiciary Board in awkward positions: If the Administration exercises these powers, they are criticized for not consulting the Judiciary Board. If they fail to act at all, faith is lost in both the Judiciary Board and the Administration, and they both become ineffective.

A joint committee, comprised of both administrators and students, would address these problems and effectively alleviate the stress on either body. The committee should be empowered to investigate incidents, discuss various testimonies, and make appropriate decisions. Because the committee would be serving in an Administrative capacity, it would, by definition, have those powers that are currently afforded to the Deans. Student participation on the committee would provide a different perspective on the incident, and would maintain student input in the judicial process. The committee would be comprised of the three class deans, the Dean of Student Affairs, the Chairman of Judiciary Board, and the SGA President, and two other students.

The committee would serve primarily as a board of inquiry but would have three options for action: if sufficient evidence is not obtained, the incident would be dismissed. If evidence is sufficient to make a Judiciary Board case, the committee would refer the incident back to Judiciary Board. If overwhelming evidence exists but is insufficient for Judiciary Board, the new committee would have the authority to make a decision. A decision such as this would be final, subject only to the student's right of appeal to the President of the College.

When the proposal was debated in the SGA assembly two main positions arose. Some, including Paige Cottingham and Alan Spalter, feared the body would exercise too much power over the students and generally felt the proposal was too vague. Others mentioned that the Administration can now do whatever they want in terms of discipline anyway. According to Herb Holtz, President of SGA, "They (the deans) can do whatever they want. It's a private school." Therefore this new committee is a way of having student input involved in the disciplinary decision-making process. Such a body would fill a void created by the cases which the Administration refers to act upon and those cases that J-Board is legally unable to handle.

Cooper said, however, there would be no faculty continued on page 2

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

By Caroleen Hughes

The third annual Oktoberfest, held last weekend, was highlighted by the return of Connecticut alumni, and the great fall weather. It was the first time, that Oktoberfest and Homecoming were organized in conjunction with one another.

The festivities began Friday night in the new "Conn Cave," with the second "Evening of Enchanting Taste," sponsored by the Social Board. It was a semi-formal, "low-key affair" with classical German music. Those who attended had the opportunity to taste seven different German wines and sample bread and cheeses. The wine and food was served by Social Board members, attired in black and white.

Karl Beeler, Coordinator of Student Activities, commented, "It was a nice get-together for faculty, alumni, and students." He noticed, that more faculty members attended the evening this year, which was nice." Overall, he said he had received a lot of "positive feed-back" regarding the event. Unfortunately, freshmen, and other students under 19 years of age, were not allowed to participate, because of the nature of the event, which emphasized the alcohol itself. Beeler thought it was "disappointing for the freshmen" and that their absence took a "big dent" out of the attendance.

Saturday's Oktoberfest, in the Quad, followed the men's soccer game at 2 p.m., and continued until 6 p.m. The nice weather and the oompah sounds of the Hartford Bavarian Band, making their second appearance at the oom-pah sounds of the Hartford Bavarian Band, while the German Club sold international candies and other traditional foods. Some dorms also participated by selling sundaes, caramel apples, and popcorn.

The theme for the Homecoming banners this year was a German coat of arms. The Social Board was able to incorporate the banners into Oktoberfest: Wunderbar! continued on page 2

Campaign for Conn College Nets $9.5 Million Thus Far

By Christopher Boyd

A national campaign to raise $30 million for the future of Connecticut College was officially started last week during the Homecoming festivities. It is known as the "Campaign for Connecticut College" and, according to Jane Bredehow, Assistant to the President, it has already received widespread support: approximately one-third of the $30 million goal has been realized.

Bredehow said, that the idea for the campaign actually began in December, 1979. "In February of '82, we decided that our official kick-off would be in the Fall," she said. There are basically of Palmer Library; New London Hall, Cro, and other areas, athletic center:$9.1 million.

- Current Operations: $9.5 million.

Bredehow explained, that the campaign is being run through "basic campaign organizations," in which research is done to find the "potential large givers (or) donors to the campaign. Usually, they are the first whom you solicit," she said.

A brochure, entitled "Facts About Connecticut College," compares the endowment per student to that of comparative colleges. Based on that comparison, Connecticut has one of the lowest en-
A Senior's Nemesis

By MB Christie

Have you noticed a change in the Senior's curriculum lately?

Instead of dealing with books, exams, and papers, they are working on resumes and getting interviews. The dinner table conversation has changed from seminar papers to resume formats and term papers. Students have given way to conservative suits. Seniors are anxious about their future career prospects. They have been pouring into the Career Counseling office at double the rate they did last September, and a record high number of students are taking advantage of the January internship program.

Miss Betsy James, director of Career Counseling, suggests the best way to proceed is through networking, commonly called connections. Knowing someone in the field, or having a referral from someone who knows someone in the field, is the best way to get an interview. These connections may be through Connecticut College alumni, family friends and relatives, and any chance acquaintance. Miss James tells the story of how one alumnus got a job by writing to the father of children she had babysat many years before. She stretched the definition of networking but is now successfully employed.

Perhaps the best advice for seniors is to tap all their resources because most employers will give "courtesy interviews" or "informational interviews" to those who are referred. It is not to get an interview cold, especially for those not advertised.

During and after the interview, the student's qualification must be stressed for better employers. Employers may grant a "courtesy interview" but this does not mean that they are bound to employ the applicant. A strong resume emphasizing good field experience and a solid academic background along with an enthusiastic, interesting personality will be favorable to employers. Even if he has no job offers, he should probably refer a good prospect.

Campagne for Conn College

continued from page 1

The average faculty salary between Conn and several comparable colleges. Again, in both of these categories, Conn College is among the lowest.

The record, said that for these and other reasons, including the expense of staff, the first four students will be applying to colleges in the Harkness' first year won second place in the Conn College "was the idea for an Oktoberfest at Conn College."

New Judicial Body Proposed

continued from page 7

representation on the committee because it was felt that faculty shouldn't be involved with social issues.

The idea for this student administrative judicial committee was pioneered by Joe Cooper and Herb Hollis last spring, although the need for it has been acknowledged for quite some time. In addition to Cooper and Hollis, the plans have been discussed and approved in principle by Margaret Watson, Dean of Student Affairs; Alice Johnson, Dean of the College, Judicature Board, and the SGA Executive Board.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

Oktoberfest originated with Greg McKeon, '83. He organized the first Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped to coordinate for the German Club two years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

Organization and enthusiasm were the keys to the success of Oktoberfest, according to Sonia Cahn, Special Events Chairperson of Social Board. "As the first Board at-large event this year, it gave us the opportunity to show everyone that we were as a group. Everyone was so enthusiastic about helping out," she noted.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

the decoration of the Quad area by flying them over the crowd and Blackstone dorms. Knowlton House received top honors for their banner and a dorm pizza party. The second place and a sundae party for its members. A new addition this year was the "beer garden" on the lawn. Coopers and Holtz, for quite some time. In addition, the idea for this student-organized Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

The idea for an Oktoberfest at Conn College was the idea for an Oktoberfest at Conn College. The idea for this student-administrative judicial committee was pioneered by Joe Cooper and Herb Hollis last spring, although the need for it has been acknowledged for quite some time. In addition to Cooper and Hollis, the plans have been discussed and approved in principle by Margaret Watson, Dean of Student Affairs; Alice Johnson, Dean of the College, Judicature Board, and the SGA Executive Board.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

Oktoberfest originated with Greg McKeon, '83. He organized the first Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped to coordinate for the German Club two years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

Organization and enthusiasm were the keys to the success of Oktoberfest, according to Sonia Cahn, Special Events Chairperson of Social Board. "As the first Board at-large event this year, it gave us the opportunity to show everyone that we were as a group. Everyone was so enthusiastic about helping out," she noted.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

Oktoberfest originated with Greg McKeon, '83. He organized the first Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped to coordinate for the German Club two years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

Organization and enthusiasm were the keys to the success of Oktoberfest, according to Sonia Cahn, Special Events Chairperson of Social Board. "As the first Board at-large event this year, it gave us the opportunity to show everyone that we were as a group. Everyone was so enthusiastic about helping out," she noted.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

Oktoberfest originated with Greg McKeon, '83. He organized the first Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped to coordinate for the German Club two years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

Organization and enthusiasm were the keys to the success of Oktoberfest, according to Sonia Cahn, Special Events Chairperson of Social Board. "As the first Board at-large event this year, it gave us the opportunity to show everyone that we were as a group. Everyone was so enthusiastic about helping out," she noted.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

Oktoberfest originated with Greg McKeon, '83. He organized the first Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped to coordinate for the German Club two years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

Organization and enthusiasm were the keys to the success of Oktoberfest, according to Sonia Cahn, Special Events Chairperson of Social Board. "As the first Board at-large event this year, it gave us the opportunity to show everyone that we were as a group. Everyone was so enthusiastic about helping out," she noted.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

Oktoberfest originated with Greg McKeon, '83. He organized the first Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped to coordinate for the German Club two years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

Organization and enthusiasm were the keys to the success of Oktoberfest, according to Sonia Cahn, Special Events Chairperson of Social Board. "As the first Board at-large event this year, it gave us the opportunity to show everyone that we were as a group. Everyone was so enthusiastic about helping out," she noted.

Oktoberfest: Wunderbar!

continued from page 1

Oktoberfest originated with Greg McKeon, '83. He organized the first Oktoberfest for the German Club three years ago, and helped to coordinate for the German Club two years ago, and helped coordinate the event this year for the Social Board. This year was the first year that it did not rain on Oktoberfest.

Organization and enthusiasm were the keys to the success of Oktoberfest, according to Sonia Cahn, Special Events Chairperson of Social Board. "As the first Board at-large event this year, it gave us the opportunity to show everyone that we were as a group. Everyone was so enthusiastic about helping out," she noted.
Ecology, Recycling, and Dr. Niering

By Michael Schoenwald

"Human Ecology, H says Professor William A. Niering, is one of the few examples of private student enterprises to be found on the campus. According to Marc, "it took a lot of campaigning" to persuade the administration to accept their idea. "We had to make a presentation, and explain exactly what we'd accept their idea. "We had to make a presentation, and explain exactly what we'd accept their idea."

Swanson on Women in Politics

By Meg McClellan

Although women make up 53.4 percent of this country's population, only 10 percent of all elected officials are female. Such a statistic leads one to wonder: Why aren't women more active? According to Wayne Swanson, professor of Government, "Women in Politics" given to the Women's Studies class on September 30, 1982, attempted to answer this question with one lecture.

"Women in Politics" examine the low number of women in politics. He feels that, it is "vital" for women to get involved in politics, but doing so may mean "work within the system" instead of attacking it from the outside. However, just getting into the "system" can be rather difficult.

Swanson feels that politics has traditionally been a "man's field," and that men are frequently the active participants in government. One reason for this dominance is what Swanson calls "political socialization," one of the ways in which political opinions are impressed on other people. Such "political socialization" occurs, for instance, when a parent's views on women in politics are adopted, in turn, by a child.

Swanson also feels that, because fewer women than men hold jobs outside the home, men are more likely to become involved in how the "real world" is governed.

Women who run for political office often have very specific difficulties to overcome. According to Swanson, raising campaign money is often more challenging for a woman than a man. Women have traditionally had more experience soliciting funds, and men have more financial connections than women. Female candidates are also concerned with the issues of abortion and ERA, in what Swanson calls a "cross" that women have to bear. A core issue for both male and female voters is the following campaign funds, and often have to do what they can to keep the "system" intact.

Nevertheless, Swanson feels that some women who run for office are at an advantage. He said, that a woman's "outside force" can be "cross" that women have to bear. A core issue for both male and female voters is the following campaign funds, and often have to do what they can to keep the "system" intact.

Swanson feels that politics has traditionally been a "man's field," and that men are frequently the active participants in government. One reason for this dominance is what Swanson calls "political socialization," one of the ways in which political opinions are impressed on other people. Such "political socialization" occurs, for instance, when a parent's views on women in politics are adopted, in turn, by a child.

Swanson also feels that, because fewer women than men hold jobs outside the home, men are more likely to become involved in how the "real world" is governed.

Women who run for political office often have very specific difficulties to overcome. According to Swanson, raising campaign money is often more challenging for a woman than a man. Women have traditionally had more experience soliciting funds, and men have
Ireland: A Conquered Land

To the Editor:

Robert Mahoney wrote truthfully about Ireland. It has been the victim of brutal injustices at the hands of arrogant, evil, totalitarian fascist societies and the antithesis of liberty, equality, fraternity. I believe this was a result of the complete manipulation of all intellectual and political thought, expression of that thought, as well as activities to supress individuality and any kind of scientific skepticism.

In my own case, I only am a fellow test taker, of course. I believe, to obey, to supress individualism and to supress the freedom of the people living under it, is the supreme sovereignty of the nation as absolute. And it demands of the people living under it, a complete submission to duty and blind obedience to an indisputable leader. As George Orwell so dramatically demonstrated in all of us, a fascist society like any other totalitarian society regardless of its label, demands the complete manipulation of all intellectual and political thought. It is the supreme sovereignty of the nation as absolute.

I am waiting for the Irish to understand that peace would follow if either or both were to follow Sadat's lead and recognize Israel. Peace would follow if either or both were to follow Sadat's lead and recognize Israel.

J. Alan Winter
Professor

THE CONNECTICUT COLLEGE

Editorial offices are located in Room 212, Crozier-Williams Student Center. Mailing address: Box 1351, Connecticut College, New London, CT 06320. Phone: (203) 447-1911, Ext. 7226.

Kenneth Larkin
Assistant Editor
Mark Jordan
Associate Editor
Lee Ann Christiano
Business Manager
Jennifer Price
Managing Editor
Maria Wyckoff
News Editor
Garry Bliss
Senior Writer
Marian Elgo
Secretary
Rachel Youree
Arts & Entertainment
Eric Jacobson & Michael Federman
Sports Editor
Steve Lau
Features Editor
Daisy Smith
Photography Editor
Katherine Cybulski

Business Staff — Ann Babcock, Ann Clark, Mike Gettendenken, Howard Lefkowitz.
Layout Staff — Howard Gegen, Michael Julian, Heather Lane, Leslie Lamkin, Bill Walter, Charles Wurts, Anne Young.
Your Conn College ID:

Don't Leave Home Without It

By Sally Peters

Have you ever really thought about the many uses of your Connecticut College ID? Well, start. This valuable piece of plastic can entitle you to special rates at movies, such-a deal), and admission to exciting campus parties. It is also very helpful in getting into your friend's rooms, although carding works much better on doors in middle or south campus dorms. And don't try to cash a check outside of the bank. You might have to look to Nancy and Sluggo. Think about that while you're on the beach in Rio, Garry Trudeau!

By Perry Karlaff

There were times when you didn't read it because it had too many words. You may have criticized it for tackling a subject that "too close to home." You may have said the characters looked too much alike. You didn't really appreciate it until you got to college. "It" is Doonesbury, and it's creator, Garry Trudeau, is going to take an eighteen month sabbatical from the comic strip near the end of this year.

This means no more Zonker Harris, B.D., Duke, Roland Hedley, or Mike Doonesbury. The ironic fact is that while Zonker is out on job interviews, his creator is taking a walk from his job.

Naturally, there are some comic strips that will take up the slack during Doonesbury's absence. The true comic strip aficionado knows the increasingly popular "Bloom County" will doubt grab the top spot and claim to the King of the Comics. "Boo!" Reutiring the Skyler, the Professor, and Shoe is not far behind. Then, of course, there are the old favorites — "Garfield" and "Peanuts." Conversely, why couldn't we get "Mutt and Jeff" on vacation? Why couldn't " Schmidt" be on vacation? Even in the comic strips, there is truly no justice.

One question, though, is what will Garry Trudeau do for eighteen long months? Will he watch his wife, Jane Pauley, on the "Today" show or will he sleep till noon?

Perhaps he'll start an herb garden, fix that leaky roof over the den, or hop on a political bandwagon. There is the possibility of doing some substantial laundry. One could realistically take up and abandon hang-gliding in eighteen months. Besides, you can only watch so many episodes of "Family Feud" and "The Price is Right" before something starts to snap!

Perhaps an even bigger question is: What will the world be like when he wakes up to in one and a half years Mr. Trudeau. In the interim, though, it's we readers who are the big losers. Without Doonesbury, it may, well, not be able to say that I'm "politically aware." I may even be forced — with some apprehension — to turn to the only other viable source of news: "National Enquirer."

There were times when you couldn't get "Mutt and Jeff" on vacation. Why couldn't " Schmidt" be the one of an arena? Even in the comic strips, there is truly no justice.

One question, though, is what will Garry Trudeau do for eighteen long months? Will he watch his wife, Jane Pauley, on the "Today" show or will he sleep till noon?

Perhaps he'll start an herb garden, fix that leaky roof over the den, or hop on a political bandwagon. There is the possibility of doing some substantial laundry. One could realistically take up and abandon hang-gliding in eighteen months. Besides, you can only watch so many episodes of "Family Feud" and "The Price is Right" before something starts to snap!

Philosophical, we readers who are the big losers. Without Doonesbury, it may, well, not be able to say that I'm "politically aware." I may even be forced — with some apprehension — to turn to the only other viable source of news: "National Enquirer."

By Patrick Kennedy

Millions of football fans are not being deprived of NFL action to feed the ego of one man; Players' Association Director Ed Garvey. His relentless drive makes more than sport, and effectively to become its star, its consumer, its leader. For instance, in Harris, says she now stands in front of the doors and doesn't let them get by. "the "them" she is referring to are the obnoxious slime-dogs who forget their IDs. On those occasions when a student honestly lost his or her ID, they were asked to purchase another and are escorted to the "boss" to get a temporary pass good for one week.

Mildred (not her real name), gave an example of two alumni, whose faces she remembered from last year, who tried to get into Harris and were turned away. You can't fool Mildred. She knew they had been drinking. She held her mark and sent the invidious vagabonds many as they screamed that they didn't want the food anyway. Obviously they haven't found jobs yet and are a little short on cash.

Mildred remembers faces. If she recognizes a student she usually lets them in without infor- mation. She humbly realizes she can't stop the devil who slide in through the doors inside the dining room. But she does her best. For a quiet old lady she has a military mind discipline disposition.

Mildred asks careless and moneyless students, (and those few who actually enjoy institutional food), to remember their IDs. If you are not forgetful, have your housefellow pin it to your shirt or attach it to your key ring. Although you may not look like a nerd, you will never go without a meal.

The key issue in the NFL Players' Strikers is too, whether the players should get more money. Almost everybody, including those on both sides of the bargaining table, agrees that they should. Instead, the main question is how this should be done. Rather than pushing for a liberalized free agency, the players' union is trying to appropriate 55 percent of the league's gross receipts, and use that money to pay players according to a wage scale determined by the union. The players would be paid by position and experience.

The stupidity of this idea is readily apparent. It is trying to take into account how good players are, not how many of them. For instance, a baseball player's salary would be tied to his position and experience. If the baseball player and the football player had the same position and experience, the football player would make more money, because he says that owners would refuse to bid for free agents regardless of compensation. This is pure, self-serving garbage. Tom Cousineau, a star linebacker, who became a free agent without compensation via a quiet in the rules, was much sought after and brought down big bucks when he put his services on the market.

Garvey argues that the reason Garvey wants this system is because it would give him tremendous power over the game. Garvey would determine how much money players would get. By re- distributing pro football's wealth from the deserving star players to other players who are not as good and thus threatened with the draft, Garvey is trying to pay them a fair share of the money, because he says that owners would refuse to bid for free agents regardless of compensation. This is pure, self-serving garbage. Tom Cousineau, a star linebacker, who became a free agent without compensation via a quiet in the rules, was much sought after and brought down big bucks when he put his services on the market.

Garvey argues that the reason Garvey wants this system is because it would give him tremendous power over the game. Garvey would determine how much money players would get. By re-distributing pro football's wealth from the deserving star players to other players who are not as good and thus threatened with the draft, Garvey is trying to pay players or is it the other way around?

The NFL Strike

Ed Garvey's Power Grab

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

Ed Garvey's Power Grab

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karlaff

By Perry Karla...
Chinese Song and Dance: Mystical

Conn Singing Groups: In Tune

by Chris Rempler

After their performances at Parent's Weekend, the Conn Chords, Bet Miller, and Laurie Anderson are highly complimented. It is quite obvious that Connecticut College's close harmony singing groups, The Shusiffs, the Conn Chords, and the CoCo Beaux, are stronger and more versatile than ever. Over the past few weekends, they have been enthusiastically received by large audiences both on and off campus. Their appearances are adult and professional, yet they entertain with a flair that is more than adequate for their audience.

Why is everything working out so well? The answer is usually found in leadership, and these groups are no exception. As "pitches" for the three groups, Bet Miller, Laurie Anderson, and Alan Cohen are largely responsible for each group's success, and have become the focal points of their growth. Bet Miller, '83, of the fourteen member Shusiffs, is especially upon the group's pitch, creating the beautiful and compact sound typified by the group. Her goals for the year are to make the group as versatile as possible, and to further develop a style of performing that is "showy" and entertaining for the audience. Also, coming this year, there will be an album, which has been in the works for the past several months. The group is now led by junior, Laurie Anderson. Recently, the group displayed its prowess by performing during Parent's Weekend with the new coed singing group from Yale, Mixed Company. Laurie believes that the group's sound is constantly improving, and her goals include more singing on campus, fundraising through performances at local restaurants and night spots, and increasing the group's current concert circuit to include more universities and colleges. Laurie is particularly compensate with both the groups are the painting "Marsh and Sunset at the Opening of the several of his paintings are of dark, accurately depicting space in the painting is rich in reflection of Marin's work, very effective in most of the paintings. He had said that the mystic anxiety one has while painting the sea, and in so doing, one of the most interesting charac-

Conn Chords are lead by junior, Laurie Anderson. With fine leadership and the CoCo Beaux, are stronger and more versatile than ever. Over the past few weekends, they have been enthusiastically received by large audiences both on and off campus. Their appearances are adult and professional, yet they entertain with a flair that is more than adequate for their audience.

Why is everything working out so well? The answer is usually found in leadership, and these groups are no exception. As "pitches" for the three groups, Bet Miller, Laurie Anderson, and Alan Cohen are largely responsible for each group's success, and have become the focal points of their growth. Bet Miller, '83, of the fourteen member Shusiffs, is especially upon the group's pitch, creating the beautiful and compact sound typified by the group. Her goals for the year are to make the group as versatile as possible, and to further develop a style of performing that is "showy" and entertaining for the audience. Also, coming this year, there will be an album, which has been in the works for the past several months. The group is now led by junior, Laurie Anderson. Recently, the group displayed its prowess by performing during Parent's Weekend with the new coed singing group from Yale, Mixed Company. Laurie believes that the group's sound is constantly improving, and her goals include more singing on campus, fundraising through performances at local restaurants and night spots, and increasing the group's current concert circuit to include more universities and colleges. Laurie is particularly compensate with both the groups are the painting "Marsh and Sunset at the Opening of the several of his paintings are of dark, accurately depicting space in the painting is rich in reflection of Marin's work, very effective in most of the paintings. He had said that the mystic anxiety one has while painting the sea, and in so doing, one of the most interesting charac-

Moses Pfieffer

Watercolor Artist on Exhibit at the Lyman Allyn

Moses Pfieffer, an artist who died last year, had his work on exhibit at the Lyman Allyn Museum until October third. His watercolors reflect a small portion of his many watercolors, which he painted throughout his life. They are small paintings, usually of flowers, that have a certain grace and vitality. They are very simple, but so simple that it is almost boring.

He was born in Marin for the summer of '39, and although there is some reflection of Marin's influence, Pfieffer lacks the visual and allusive force, that are so predominant in John Marin's work, however, reflects an understanding and love of nature.

One of the reasons for the calm, tranquil attitude reflected by the works was explained by his daughters, Dorrit Castle and Madeleine Pfieffer, who present at the opening of the exhibit on October third. "His father would paint in the early mornings between five and seven. His palette was simple, and of watercolor. He used only a small, soft, sp-

A solitary woman

Standing off in murky, moon-filled water

A murky, moon-filled woman

Wondering why "woman" is too big a label to fit into yet

She sat alone that night

On the pier

Looking over the Hudson.

The aircraft carrier

Loomed larger than life

Or death next to her

"I'm not afraid of death."

She reflected the moon, she thought. And she basked in the mood, she said.

One of the most attractive features of this painting is the use of props such as fans and parasols. All in all, the painting was a thriller. When the number was like a thrilling Broadway musical and gymnastic leaps.

Part three, called "From Tradition to Modern," displayed the modern conception of the Chinese music developed a strength and full of pagentry, while others were danced with gaiety and vitality. In the prologue where dancers demonstrated the eternal winds that blow over the desert. Others were light-hearted and humorous as in the dance called "Blossoms in the Full Moon," that dealt with love at first sight. There was also an incredible array of costumes. Each one was of a vibrant colored silk or satin, and they glued against the bare black background, revealing a strange, hypnotic quality. The background was as captivating features, the program held the interest of every age group in the audience.

There were a few small problems however. A few cases were off in the lighting and in the scratchy recording of an American narrator who introduced each piece. Several accessories in the costumes fell off during the performance, and a few lines that the dancers formed were askew, but all these minor problems were insignificant to the audience and even to the performers. The evening was filled with such a warm spirit of mutual appreciation that the audience couldn't resist giving a standing ovation, which was definitely well deserved.

By Sarah Hutter

Last Friday night in Palmer Auditorium, Connecticut College's seventh annual Chinese Song and Dance Festival took place. Titled "A Pleasure of Receiving a Group," the performance featured thirteen //~ 5000000 ~

Chinese music developed a strength and full of pagentry, while others were danced with gaiety and vitality. In the prologue where dancers demonstrated the eternal winds that blow over the desert. Others were light-hearted and humorous as in the dance called "Blossoms in the Full Moon," that dealt with love at first sight. There was also an incredible array of costumes. Each one was of a vibrant colored silk or satin, and they glued against the bare black background, revealing a strange, hypnotic quality. The background was as captivating features, the program held the interest of every age group in the audience.

There were a few small problems however. A few cases were off in the lighting and in the scratchy recording of an American narrator who introduced each piece. Several accessories in the costumes fell off during the performance, and a few lines that the dancers formed were askew, but all these minor problems were insignificant to the audience and even to the performers. The evening was filled with such a warm spirit of mutual appreciation that the audience couldn't resist giving a standing ovation, which was definitely well deserved.

By Sarah Hutter

Last Friday night in Palmer Auditorium, Connecticut College's seventh annual Chinese Song and Dance Festival took place. Titled "A Pleasure of Receiving a Group," the performance featured thirteen //~ 5000000 ~

Chinese music developed a strength and full of pagentry, while others were danced with gaiety and vitality. In the prologue where dancers demonstrated the eternal winds that blow over the desert. Others were light-hearted and humorous as in the dance called "Blossoms in the Full Moon," that dealt with love at first sight. There was also an incredible array of costumes. Each one was of a vibrant colored silk or satin, and they glued against the bare black background, revealing a strange, hypnotic quality. The background was as captivating features, the program held the interest of every age group in the audience.

There were a few small problems however. A few cases were off in the lighting and in the scratchy recording of an American narrator who introduced each piece. Several accessories in the costumes fell off during the performance, and a few lines that the dancers formed were askew, but all these minor problems were insignificant to the audience and even to the performers. The evening was filled with such a warm spirit of mutual appreciation that the audience couldn't resist giving a standing ovation, which was definitely well deserved.
A Conquered Land
continued from page 4
not be denied. I truly lament the fact that the use of force lies at ...

Power Grab
continued from page 5

Although the NFL has a similar high compensation deter offers to free agents and makes it meaningless. If the league were to renounce compensation in favor of only the right of first refusal, the players would be back in casualties in no matter what the union said. The result would be good for everyone—players, owners, and fans. Everyone, that is,
except Ed Garvey.
Men's Crew off to Strong Stroke with New Coach

By Alan Weln and Cliff Molterew
Although crew is a Spring sport, the men's crew team has been working out since the start of school. You probably have seen members of the team running on campus or staggering into breakfast at 6-8 a.m. after a 6 a.m. practice. This year there is a growing feeling of optimism over the crew team, and with good reason, for the 42 men that make up the varsity and freshman crew team, the largest Conn College crew ever. This is partly attributed to the fact that Conn has a new crew coach.

Tom Boyer is a welcome edition to the Conn College coaching staff, coaching all of men's crew. At 35, he already has 17 years coaching experience, including coaching the West Side rowing club to first place at the 1980 National Championship and the women's flyweight four division. He brings to Conn a winning attitude and a strong love for crew. Boyer also brings a strict training program that the crew team must follow. It is more rigorous than any in the past at Conn College. The workout consists of five days a week, the water for 11/2 hours, optional Sunday, and seven days a week land training for one hour. This year new equipment for indoor conditioning also became available. The crew team has a new rowing machine and new rowing machines, in addition to the equipment at the West Side rowing club. Although Boyer's program only one person has dropped off the team and that was due to scheduling problems. All of this hard work should help the crew team in its fall races - the Head of the Charles and the Head of the Connecticut.

The varsity and freshmen crews are looking forward to next Sunday's head of the Connecticut in Middletown, CT. The most prestigious race of the fall, the Camels take place in Boston, MA., on October 24. The varsity crew will be competing in this event for the first time in many years. The Head of the Charles race, Boyer has high hopes that the varsity heavy weight crew will finish among the top 15 out of 40 teams. On the other hand, he is not overly concerned where the Freshmen crews finish only that they gain experience. Overall, he expects all of his crews to fare well, and to perform better in the spring.

Still, the coach realizes that there is a lot to be gained by the importance of Conn. He is confident that if there is a team that is really good, he will come to him to solve it. In fact, both men's and women's teams have been coached separately with the coach on the issue. Boyer feels that he has never coached any place where athletes are so conscious toward academics as well as athletics.

Women's Tennis Team
hosts State Tournament

By Tracy Shipman
Women's tennis at Conn-necticut College enjoys the reputation of one of the College's strongest teams and this fall the tradition continues.

There are fifteen young women on the team, coached by Sheryl Yesari. This year the team has sight returning seniors, juniors and sophomores, with seven new recruits. Thus far their record is 5-1, with wins over Clark 8-2, Mount Holyoke 7-2, Southern 7-2, Salisbury Regents 7-2, University of Hartford 5-2, and a loss to Trinity 2-1.

The entire team exhibits great skill and depth. Coach Yesari attributes this to the fact that many of the players have grown together over a three or four year period. These same players display quite a professional attitude toward the game, and provide a fine example for the new college players.

Homecoming weekend the Camels hosted the State Tournament. Cici Kossman, '84 and Mary-Ann Somers, '85 represented the team in the singles play, and the doubles teams of Blair Nicholas and Leslie Leeming and Taryl Johnson - Cathy Leeming also represented the team.

Cici Kossman lost to a player from Southern in the consolation round, and ended by losing to a player from Bridgeport. Mary-Ann Somers first lost to a player from Trinity, then went on to defeat players from Wesleyan and Central. She made it to the finals of the consolation round, and lost to the same Bridgeport player as Cici. A freshman from Trinity won the singles.

In the doubles, Nichol- Leeming lost to a team from Trinity. They defeated a team from Central in the consolation, and then lost to a team from U. Conn. Johnson-Leeming beat teams from Central and Wesleyan, and then lost to a team from U. Conn in the semi-finals. A team from UConn won the doubles play overall.

Soccer Team Loses to Wesleyan

By Robert Kanahl
Two early second half goals provided all the scoring as Wesleyan defeated the Camels 2-0 in Saturday's soccer rivalry, disappointing an eager Oktoberfest crowd.

After an intense start, the players settled down considerably in the first half. The Camels held a slight advantage in the opening minutes, as the bigger Wesleyan squad, and gaining on the scoring opportunities. Bert Cruacha, Tom Liptack, and Dave Fearon made some good saves in the scoring opportunities, while James Crowley and Joey Tatum played outstandingly on the defensive. However, after controlling most of the first half, the Camels went into halftime in a 0-0 deadlock.

Wesleyan's easy second half goals killed the Camels' momentum, and forced them into a catch-up situation. Bert Cruacha, Litoff Sets Record

Cross Country Running Well

By Ned Bishop
The Camels' Men's Cross- Country team took a hard-earned win in a good performance on October 2, at the Pop. competitive crow of Conn College runners.

Dave Litoff, went in as the pre-meet favorite and showed just why. Litoff took the early lead, passing the mile mark record which he set a year earlier, driving from his first two victories and 46 seconds behind Litoff.

The team trophy in the meet was taken by Stonehill College, with 49 points. The Camels placed 56th in the twelve team field, giving them their first two victories of the season. The Camels' team score of 212 points was earned by Litoff (1st), Geoff Farrell (4th), Peter Foley (5th), Ken Cadigan (31st), and Ned Bishop (62nd).

The Camels' records now stand at 8-4 (dual meets) and 2-13 (overall). The team is looking forward to the Fish Bowl and the NESCAC championships. The team won the Cod Fish trophy two seasons ago, and many of the same runners are still with the team. This will be the first year for the team in the NESCAC's.