Nobel Prize Winner Brodsky and Soviet Writers Discuss Glasnost Effects

by Rebecca Flynn
The College Voice

The wisdom and teachings of Nobel laureate Joseph Brodsky and three well-respected Russian writers marked the second annual Daniel Klagsbrun Symposium at Connecticut College on Thursday and Friday.

Brodsky was joined by poet Tatyana Beck and short story author Valeri Popov, both of whom have never before traveled to the United States, as well as nationally recognized translator Victor Golishev.

The symposium, during which the authors read from their works and then participated in a panel discussion, dealt with the boundaries that have restricted Soviet writers.

The authors seemed in agreement that, with glasnost and other aspects of the new openness in the Soviet Union, the boundaries facing Soviet writers are much lower now. But,

Elie Wiesel, Nobel peace prize recipient, brought insight and honor to the college Saturday night in celebration of the Chair of Judaic Studies established in his name.

Speaking in a filled Palmer Auditorium, Wiesel shared his thoughts on studying the Jewish tradition and teachings of the Talmud, his memories of the Holocaust and its impact.

On learning, Wiesel said, "I believe no adventure can be as inspiring as that which occurs between a teacher and his student. . . They have a text before them and the power to unfold that text. The text is there as an offering, inviting me and you, 'come inside,' and then we begin unraveling layer after layer. . ."

Wiesel described the story of Adam and Eve as symbolic of mankind. "We all come from the same origin, black or white, poor or rich, learned or not, we all have the same beginning."

A survivor of the Holocaust, Wiesel said, "We crown God as the God of the universe, but remember He was God of that universe too."

Wiesel recalled the beadle of his childhood village and the beadle's practice of going from house to house, "knocking on doors and windows," telling the Jews to "Awake, arise, come pray . . ." Later in his address, Wiesel expressed the need for a beadle to call the

Professor Cibes Loses Democratic Primary

by Lauren Klatzkin
Connecticut View Editor

A crushing defeat by Third Congressional District Representative Bruce Morrison in last Tuesday's state Democratic gubernatorial primary proved to be disappointing but not fatal to the political career of William Cibes, professor of government at Connecticut College. Despite an overwhelming numerical loss, Cibes and his campaign staff, friends, and family remained optimistic about the possibility of a quick return into the political arena.

Cibes lost the election by gaining only 36 percent of the vote. Morrison received 64 percent of the total.

With his victory, Morrison entered a three-way contest for the office of governor. His opponents are Republican Congressman John Rowland and maverick former senator and ex-Republican Lowell Weicker, who has entered this race as a candidate of the Connecticut Party, which he formed.

Debate over the cause of Cibes' defeat focused on his unpopular advocacy of a state income tax, his late entry into the race, his lack of name recognition, and the astoundingly low voter turnout on the day of the primary.

John Maggiore, '91, student government association president and the first full-time staff member of Cibes' campaign, commented that the primary was "a very crucial election - really Cibes [was] offering . . . a brave new initiative, and the other three candidates are not offering anything."

Cibes, a 12-year state representative from New London who has spent the past two years as chair of the powerful Finance, Revenue, and Bonding Committee, has thoroughly studied state finances and believes that an income tax is the only way to raise enough revenue to counter the state's deficit. His proposed income tax is part of a package which would lower many other taxes, constitutionally capping the state sales tax at 5 percent.

Cibes' opponents capitalized on his unpopular tax platform largely by ignoring the issue.

Another advantage Morrison had over Cibes is the fact that Morrison, who officially announced his candidacy last January, actually began campaigning a year and a half ago. At that time, it was widely expected that incumbent governor William O'Neill would seek re-election.

Students Criticize Parents' Weekend Scheduling

by Sarah Huntley
News Editor

As Elie Wiesel, Nobel Peace Prize winner, addressed an enthusiastic audience and Claire Gaudiani, '66, president of the college, applauded the lessons to be gleaned from the Jewish tradition, next weekend seemed a distant thought.

To some students, however, the administration's support was somewhat contradictory.

Next weekend is Parents' Weekend. Scheduled two weeks earlier than in the past, the event closely follows the Jewish High Holiday of Rosh Hashanah.

Rosh Hashanah, the second holiest holiday in the Jewish year, begins on Wednesday at sundown and continues until Friday evening.

Traditionally, this is a time for reaffirmation of faith and close relations within the family unit. Many Jewish students return home to spend the holiday with their families.

Parents' Weekend events begin at 10 a.m. on Friday morning and will continue into Sunday.

The Student Government Association at Thursday's meeting voted in support of a letter to be sent to the administration criticizing the scheduling of the family-oriented event.

The letter, sponsored by Russell Yankwitt, house senator of Windham, said, "The process which resulted in the selection of Parents' Weekend, September 21-23 suggests an insensitivity on the part of the planners which is unbefitting of an institution which is striving to promote global awareness."

In addition, the proposal stated, "The Assembly strongly urges that the administration use more foresight in future academic planning to avoid any further conflict with minorities regardless of the denomination."

CONNTHOUGHT

Realizing the Urgency of Learning

Having two Nobel prize winners speak at Connecticut College within days of each other is a clear indication of the commitment being made to enhance the quality of intellectual life outside the classrooms. We hear a lot of talk about the globalization of this school and President Gaudiani's desire to move us into the highest echelon of liberal arts colleges; here is a clear example of that initiative.

This commitment extends into the community outside the College walls. Interested locals and professors comprised the bulk of attendees at the Klagsburn Symposium. Although generous estimates put the number of students at the readings and discussion at an embarrassingly low fifty, the appearance of Joseph Brodsky and his compatriots was an incredible intellectual experience available to all.

Given the low student turnout at Thursday night's Daniel Klagsburn Symposium reading by Nobel laureate Joseph Brodsky, one wondered how embarrassed the College might be Saturday night at a speech by another Nobelist, Elie Wiesel, as he inaugurated the chair in his name.

Fortunately, Palmer Auditorium was standing room only for one of the most moving presentations in the College's history.

Saturday night, Wiesel's speech brought a tremendous message of hope and peace to an audience much better represented by the student body. He spoke of the power and importance of learning while emphasizing his personal responsibility to prepare us to better the world we are inheriting. He betrayed the code adhered to by most of today's leaders and accepted responsibility for preparing youth for the future.

The honorary doctorate bestowed upon Wiesel was the first he has received. That Connecticut College has the honor of starting the list of schools which will give him such degrees is a great achievement.

In the upcoming years, the Elie Wiesel Chair in Judaic Studies will benefit the students by broadening the curriculum, thereby providing a better opportunity to partake in a well-rounded education.

"The Jewish tradition teaches us that we must learn in order to know; that we must learn in order to teach; finally, and most importantly, we must learn in order to do," was how Jo Ann Hess Meyers, '67, the endower of the Wiesel chair, described its importance. This spirit, this belief, needs to be translated to the entire community, but most importantly, to the students.

Reckless and Superficial

We signed a pact with the administration during matriculation. In return for the freedom of living away from home, we have been forced to become oblivious to the current affairs of the world, abuse our bodies with alcohol, and shift the atmosphere of dorm life from comforting to stoical.

For starters, we've turned our dorms into common brothels. The men allow their screaming hormones to take over minds and the ladies allow themselves to be made cheap by sleeping around. And why the hell do we hate the Coasties so much, don't they provide all of our "income?"

Innocent relationships between men and women have disappeared. Have not male/female relationships within this community sunk to the level where you assume that a person of the opposite sex is "coming on" if he or she spends a lot of time with you?

As if walking and thinking genitals weren't bad enough, our dorms have apparently created people who would argue that cable television is a fundamental human right and others who would propose a dorm civil war party in which the side to finish a keg of beer first wins. (What did the admissions office see in us?)

And what's worse is that we have taken our insensitive and superficial nature into the classroom. Throw a grain of salt when the guy who poisons his body with alcohol speaks of David Copperfield's loss of innocence in English or when the girl who sleeps around gets offended when she's called a slut.

The amazing thing about all this is that the real damage is not done to the people who drink and blow off homework but those who don't. Let's put ourselves in the shoes of someone who doesn't abuse himself/herself and takes academics seriously...

You're studying for your first college exam. You like it quiet but your roommate invites his/her friends into your room to chat. Because it's the beginning of your freshman year and you don't know your roommate well enough, you don't tell him/her to leave, fearing you might hurt your roommate's feelings.

We would feel peer pressure in this situation, wouldn't we? It would be hard for us to resist blowing off our work to have fun. So you see, "academic" pressure is not the result of tremendous amounts of homework and exams but the result of feeling like the only one who has work to do. If we all avoided heavy partying and, instead, studied every night, the only pressure we would feel would be from fatigue as opposed to peer pressure.

For those among us who grind away at their books everyday, I salute you and leave you with a few thoughts. You're the most important group of people in this community and you should not let others who think otherwise change the way you view studying.

If you feel "academic" and peer pressure accumulating, don't study in your dorms. Move to the library or to the Chapel Library to study.

And however successful you are in containing your pressures, always take time off for yourself. Take time off by taking long walks in the Arboretum or on the beach to slow down to fast pace of college life to a suitable rate. Others, whether you believe in a god or not, may find attending one of the Chapel services once a week to be best suited for you.

To conclude, I'd like to propose a challenge to the administration. I asked of you to help those in need, the minority of students who take college seriously, by implementing new policies in this community to enhance its academic/intellectual aspects. I challenge you to enforce our alcohol policy by monitoring parties for under age drinking, and to ban alcohol completely if monitoring fails to stop under age drinking or alcohol abuse. I challenge you to require the attendance of all classes and to punish those who miss them voluntarily. And I challenge you to raise the course load to five courses a semester.

Earth to Gaudiani...Earth to Gaudiani...Do you read me?

Claire Gaudiani, I challenge you to stop appearing on covers of school publications and start appearing in our dorms. I want to know what your beliefs are, where you come from, and what your personal goals for us are. Come and hold discussions in our dorms and start talking to us like a human being rather than a college president.

I challenge everyone to wake up and smell the coffee before we destroy the place we all love.

Aspen and the College Community

To the Voice:

I am responding to your editorial and article on the new telecommunications system printed in the The College Voice, September 4, 1990.

Our goal is to connect every member of the college community to a comprehensive communications network. One which would improve their security, their ability to communicate with friends and professors, and to provide it at a reasonable cost. The college is committed to making available to its students the kinds of technologies and resources they will need to successfully complete their education and which they will need to be conversant with as they begin working after college. Connecticut College has taken the lead among its peers in providing a comprehensive communications environment. While other colleges have parts of it, and others would dearly love to even begin the process of installing one, your college is now the leader of the most selective four year liberal arts colleges in its comprehensive approach to computing and telecommunications; it's something of which we are very proud.

However, the main point is not how great we are, but how well we use the system and learn about its capabilities and the ways in which our sharing and communicating information can be enhanced and amplified by using these technologies. It is because the college felt it was essential to your receiving the highest quality educational experience in addition to improving the systems that support your personal security that the system was made a requirement of all students. Through using this new system, you become part of a learning environment that amplifies and enriches the possibilities and the capabilities of all members of the community.

This system is barely a month old; the staff working with it are learning it just as you are--and there's a lot more of you than there are of us! As we work with SNET

Systems, Inc. (the company that installed the new system not to be confused with Southern New England Telephone--the company that provides phone service to the public) and others to help us stabilize the new system, we will begin to look at ways we can add services, improve responses to your concerns, and discover new applications for the resources we now have. I am very concerned that the confusion that naturally accompanies the initiation of these kinds of projects have lead some to think that they did not receive what they expected or that parts of the system are not adequate to serve their needs. To the extent my comments, regardless of the method under which they were obtained, have created this confusion, I assure you it was not intentional. Any of you who have worked personally with Roberta Carroll, SNET Systems, Inc. employees, Adrian or Pat Donohue, or myself know that we take your concerns very seriously and do our best to solve them as quickly as possible.

We will have two sessions open to students where they can have their questions answered by members of Telephone Services staff, Telecommunications Services, and SNET Systems, Inc. The sessions are being planned now for Wednesday morning, September 19 and Thursday afternoon, September 27. We are also developing a more streamlined way to handle your trouble calls and requests for changes and questions about your service and those procedures will shortly be in effect.

In the following I would like to address some additional issues which may have caused some confusion:

There has been some discussion of Totalphone, a product name for special services offered by the Southern New England Telephone Company. Totalphone is sold optionally to residential subscribers and includes call forwarding, three way conferencing, call waiting, and eight abbreviated "speed" call numbers. It does not include voice messaging, automatic call back, unlimited (flat) local dialing, basic phone service, repair and troubleshooting service, access to discounted long distance such as the college provides, or waived federal subscriber line charges.

The college offers a set of optional and basic services that provide a good deal more than Totalphone. There seems, however, to be some confusion concerning which features are optional and which are basic. We have always maintained that we could provide some Totalphone-like features in addition to some services and features which are not part of SNET's Totalphone package. We promised we could provide special features and we have, but it was never stated these feature would be part of the basic service package.

In any case, the basic package is more comprehensive than any a student could purchase from the phone company.

First, included in the basic service besides just dial tone are:

- > unlimited dialing in the local area included in the basic service.
- > a sophisticated voice messaging system, allowing students to send and receive messages to almost any phone on the campus system,
- > provision of a phone set, wiring, and an information port in each dorm room,
- > four digit intercom to any other phone on campus
- > no charge for repair or troubleshooting not due to willful damage or negligence,
- > no annual charges for installation and reprogramming of software in the PBX, voice mail, and billing systems,
- > access to discounted long distance service,
- > access to a full campus data network in Spring, 1991,
- > dramatically enhanced security system installed on each phone, additional emergency phones, and campus phones outside the main entrance of most buildings.

This year, because it is our first year with the new telecommunications system, and as a way of thanking students for their patience in helping us bring up a very complex set of electronic systems and networks, we decided to provide the optional features without additional charge. To sum up, these features are available, and we intend to sell them as optional features next year; however, compared to our basic range of services they are not really all that exciting or necessary.

It is possible to use a phone calling card from the campus network or from the forty pay phones provided at the College's expense. The main problem seems to be with the use of AT&T cards. To use an AT&T card, follow this procedure:

- 1) press 9-0-the number you wish to dial
- 2) wait for three "beeps" and then enter your PIN number
- 3) wait for the tone and enter your card information

You will hear a message "Thank you for using MCI." Ignore it, your call will be placed and your calling card will be billed at its designated billing address. You won't receive the college's five percent discount since it is not passed back to us when a credit card is used.

The new data system is scheduled to begin startup operations in Spring, 1991. We've known that since last year. However, if a student needs to connect his or her PC to the current campus network before that date, he or she can do so over the phone lines by using a modem. We will not provide the modem, but we will help you make the connection and we will absorb the cost of wiring connections and performing the necessary modifications to the PBX software so a student can temporarily use this form of data communication. Once you've connected to the current network, the tri-college library system, the academic computing systems, and e-mail (bitnet and microvax mail) will be available to you in your rooms. When the new system comes up it will no longer be necessary to use the modem.

Again, please be assured that we are working diligently to make sure that Connecticut College has the best phone service possible.

Sincerely,
Tom Makofske,
Director of Computer and Information Services

Parents React to Crusade for Cable TV

To the Voice:

As our daughter prepared to depart for her freshman year at Connecticut College in the summer of 1989, we were offered the opportunity to subscribe to the Voice. We did so with the hope of getting a sense of our daughter's new environment. The Voice has exceeded our expectations. The quality of journalism combined with the scope of articles makes reading your paper a pleasure. Articles in the Voice have kept us informed, given us pride in the college, and caused us to worry (over security issues). Last week's CONNThought piece "Cable TV is a Fundamental Right" by Mike Sneiderman was the first article to cause us distress.

We have no problem with Mr. Sneiderman's right to organize a crusade to acquire cable TV on the campus. His choice to spend part of his four college years in front of the "boob tube" is his prerogative. We hope he knows that it is possible to obtain news and weather reports from the radio.

We do object to Mr. Sneiderman's sarcastic attempt to denigrate President Gaudiani. We suggest that he use some of his spare time to become informed of the duties of a college president. Perhaps he should read her job description or her calendar. The money the college allocates for President Gaudiani's domestic and foreign travel is an investment for the present and the future. Her travels enable Conn to maintain the many fine programs available to all students. A prime example is the new chair of Judaic Studies now being implemented. She certainly does not achieve her goals for Conn by mall-hopping.

We have not yet had the pleasure of meeting President Gaudiani. However, from what we read and hear, we feel Conn is lucky to have her as its leader. Her intelligence and determined commitment to excellence are apparent in many areas. She teaches with dedication and integrity in conjunction with her consuming passion to do her best for Conn's students.

Mike Sneiderman is in the right place. He truly has a lot to learn.

Sincerely,
Maralyn and Robert Klatzkin

SAC Answers

People are talking about SAC. Some people are even questioning SAC. I applaud those who have taken the initiative to seek the accurate answers to their questions about SAC. And I congratulate the rare few who have chosen to become involved in SAC in order to clarify their misunderstandings of SAC. Either way, you have taken the responsibility to make sure that your voice is heard and reflected in the policy and programming decisions that are made about student activities at Connecticut College. That is the benefit of the strong tradition of student self-governance at Conn. I especially praise Steve Barnes' urge to the community to "give up complacency" and to help SAC do the job that it is expected to do ("Question Sac," The College Voice, 9/11/90).

I am concerned, however, that we will be unable to eliminate the rumors that are spread about student activities until the facts are conveyed accurately. Therefore, it is necessary to clarify some of the points that were inaccurately made in the CONNThought article last week.

In response to the statement that "SAC hires all of its bands through a national booking agency," it is important to note that there are many different "agents" with whom we, and the majority of colleges and universities, work to contract all types of entertainment. Furthermore, most of these agents serve only as representatives of the entertainers and receive no "middle man" fee from the schools who contract the performers. Barnes' estimate of the price of "The Sense" is proof of another misconception that is widely held. SAC does not receive the funding to spend $2000-$3000 on every band it contracts. Even this figure is not a high price for a band, but nonetheless, SAC can only afford this price tag for huge-scale events like the Winter Formal and Floralia.

Second, I think that part of the confusion about SAC stems from general lack of awareness about which events are SAC-sponsored. Specifically, the Billy Joel party to which the article referred received no SAC funding. Additionally, most people do not realize that it is their class and dorm SAC Coordinators who plan many of the study breaks, movie nights, Thursday Night Events, scavenger hunts, dorm barbeques, etc. These events are funded by the classes and dorms and planned by your SAC Coordinators.

Third, how many of us are aware that each of us has at least four voices to represent us at SAC meetings every week? Dorm and class SAC Coordinators report weekly to SAC Council meetings to discuss issues and events. These SAC Coordinators are elected specifically to answer your questions about SAC-related issues, and to contribute your ideas and concerns to the Student Activities Council. I encourage you to communicate with your SAC Coordinators so that they can better represent you and thus do a more effective job for you.

Finally, please note that all SAC Council meetings are open, and I encourage anyone with an interest or concern to join us every Tuesday at 6:15 in Ernst Common Room. As always, I urge you to get involved in and to take responsibility for the process of developing a strong program of student activities here at Conn.

Sincerely,
Amy Mass, '92
SAC Chair

VIEWPOINT

Bush's Big Hoax

To theVoice:

Who saw President Bush's address on television Tuesday night? It has persuaded me to believe that the present situation in the Middle East has been coordinated by our own government. A big hoax to help Bush push through his proposed budget. Think about it. There was the savings and loans scandal in which rich people stole billions of dollars with the government's endorsement and support. Defense spending was in danger of being drastically cut -- military bases were already closing. We have been in the midst of a subtle civil war -- Americans fighting tooth and nail over irrevocable differences about such issues as abortion, flag-burning, the NEA and the banning of albums by groups such as 2 Live Crew. What we needed was a big pep rally. What better solution than a "war."

So Bush made himself head cheerleader, urging America to shout "Go team go!" and to ignore the fact that his arguments were preposterous. Now he can (and on Tuesday did) say that we need to increase defense spending. Well of course, the team needs new uniforms, the field needs new turf. And from the stands the response is a hearty "Rah, rah!"

And not only does Bush want us to forget the savings and loans scandal ever existed, he wants us to re-endorse it. What do you think "increasing incentives" means? It means giving more loans to greedy speculators, no questions asked.

Finally, he says his goal is to reduce the national debt. Who cares? The national debt only affects the average American insofar as the government tries to fix it. Bush kept emphasizing the need for the budget to address what is "real." In that case it should not concern itself with the national debt at all, because for all intents and purposes, it is not "real." To effectively reduce it, all one needs to do is plug in the computer and move a few decimal points, changing $500 billion dollars to $5. Barbara can pay that out of her pocket change. The point is that at this point the national debt is no more than a meaningless figure. If anyone tried to call our debts, we'd call payment due on money owed us. And even if we still couldn't pay, what's the worst that can happen? Is someone with an Italian accent going to break Bush's legs?

If we listen to Bush, the worst that can happen is this -- many of our children will grow up undernourished, uneducated and uncultured. College will be unaffordable -- rent will be unaffordable. Our husbands, friends and sons will be over in the Middle East, either twiddling their thumbs or getting killed, whichever seems most politically correct. Meanwhile, a select group of people with nary a dollar to call their own will be living in billion dollar homes bought with money borrowed and stolen from the taxpaying masses.

I realize this is an opinionated letter with little or no statistical data to support it. However, Bush's address Tuesday night was no different. And he's running the country.

Rah, rah.

Sincerely,
Shelley Stoehr, '91

Skewed Priorities

To theVoice:

As I read the morning paper, I notice that we are about to go to war, crime is rampant, and that the economic condition of this country is in shambles. I open up The College Voice and my attention is drawn to an article concerning the deprivation of a fundamental human right - the denial of cable TV ("Cable TV is a Fundamental Right," CONNThought, 9/11/90) Silly me, I never realized that I was living in the midst of such "tyranny."

Attending college is a privilege; we are here to get an education - to grow intellectually through exploration of ideas, to be challenged, and to discover ourselves. We are fortunate to have this opportunity, and everything else is secondary, including TV. For Mike Sneiderman to say that cable TV is a fundamental right is absurd. Are priorities really so mixed up? I, for one, do not want to be lumped together with the whole student body as needing to "unite in protest." I could care less about cable TV. There are many more important things to worry about. What about the fundamental rights of food and shelter, which some people do not even have? These are real problems. I do watch TV and I like MTV, but I do not have a TV here at school and I do not feel I am missing out on anything.

The administration should realize that if students are not going to do their work, then they are just not going to do it. Procrastination comes in all forms, and cable TV is a weak excuse for hindering students academically. But, Camels, why get all worried about it? Maybe it is senseless for the administration to deny this added pleasure, but is it really worth the effort to go out and protest about it?

Sincerely,
Kathryn Sparks, '94

USCGA Administrator Lauds Academy Changes

by Randall Lucas
The College Voice

Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas T. Matteson and Captain Thomas Combs share a great deal - a close friendship, high ideals, and a lasting commitment to the United States Coast Guard Academy. Matteson holds the position of Academy Superintendent, while Combs is Director of Admissions. They were admitted to the Academy in the same class, and "to be a classmate,"

Second in a
Two-part series

Combs said, "is close to being a blood brother." But one can sense an even deeper friendship, held together by shared values, and marked by an easy camaraderie. That friendship began during their "swab summer" when "the ties that bind you together are molded," Combs said. They were in the same company for three years and played football together for four.

Combs said that Matteson can sense the needs of the Coast Guard for the twenty first century" and that "tradition appeals to him but he doesn't need to be bound by precedent." Combs explained that in their swab summer they had "two [Eagle] cruises followed by a cruise to Europe, and that is why [Matteson] is high on international cultural experiences."

Combs had attended college for two years before he joined the Coast Guard. "Being a couple of years older, it wasn't that much of an adjustment," he said, "nothing worse than what a fraternity could throw at you." This is in direct contrast to the experience of Matteson, who entered the Academy immediately after high school.

When Rear Admiral Matteson was asked about his own view of swab summer, he wanted to hear what Captain Combs had said first. When told, Matteson laughed and responded, "The other end of that spectrum is not knowing what will be thrown at you." Matteson had grown up on a farm and for him the Academy was a very different place. Matteson said, "I came naive and convinced that I could graduate and that they could do nothing to convince me otherwise."

Combs emphasized the "comparative mildness" of swab summer to his fraternity initiation, one part of which left him seventy-five miles outside of Albany, alone, in the dark, with no money, no car, and orders to find his way back within a strict time limit.

The summer was unbearably difficult for many others and that memory haunts both Combs and Matteson. "We lost an awful lot of people and that has stayed with us. . . I remember a lot of people who were picked on," Combs said. But some drills are needed. It is necessary to know every rope of the EAGLE by heart because at night mistakes could cause fatal accidents.

'I cannot defend thirteen hundred pushups a day on the road. If I am embarrassed then that is hazing.'

-Capt. Thomas Combs,
U.S. Coast Guard Academy
director of admissions

The Academy now emphasizes this kind of necessary learning, not the ability to withstand humiliation. Combs said that this summer, "The nature of the barracks has changed. [They have] a much more positive atmosphere." The "That's what was done to me" rationale is no longer used by seniors when leading freshmen cadets.

Humanitarian goals aside, hazing presents special problems to Combs in his role as director of admissions. "I cannot defend thirteen hundred pushups a day on the road. If I am embarrassed then that is hazing," he explained. Some methods of military training may look like hazing to those who attend civilian colleges, but hazing is grounds for expulsion from the Academy. "We investigate it more than they [civilian colleges] do," Combs stated.

Other problems also face cadets. For example, those who choose to leave the Academy sometimes face parental rejection. They are told that if they leave, "they can't come home," according to Combs. He added that in these cases the Chaplains must phone the parents and "intervene in the household."

Combs has seen many changes in the Academy during his career - "changes in academics, social life, and athletics." What used to be a "lockstep curriculum" is still "not as open as liberal arts" but now has seven majors. "When I arrived in 1952," Combs said, "I knew exactly what courses I would be in . .

my entire schedule was laid out." In addition, there are now also more athletics at the Academy, Combs said.

The Academy now has international cadets as students. "Up to thirty-six [international students attend the Academy] at any one time," Combs said. International cadets are now at the Academy from such countries as Honduras, Belize, the Philippines, Thailand and Malaysia. Combs feels a special obligation toward women and minorities. "Women and minorities should be treated equally, and the military service hasn't treated them equally . . . we don't have a good track record," Combs said. The Chief of Personnel of the Coast Guard in Washington, (Admiral Kline, also a classmate) has ordered a study of women in the Coast Guard. Combs said that "with a person like Kline, there is a moral imperative [to face the issue]."

At the top of Combs' desk is a chart listing the numbers of women and minorities in the entire Coast Guard - only two hundred and eighty nine minorities and two hundred seventy eight women. The highest ranking women in the Coast Guard are now Commanders, Combs said, and those who graduated from the Academy in 1980 will be making the rank of captain in the year 2000. Retention rates at the Academy for both women and minorities have improved over the past five years. For example, in the class of 1990, 45 percent of women were retained as opposed to 93 percent in the class of 1993. Overall retention rates for minorities in the class of 1991 was 62 percent as opposed to 83 percent in 1993. The Coast Guard used to have joint programs with Connecticut College. One such class, 'Peace and War in a Nuclear Age,' "disappeared," Combs noted with regret, when the Coast Guard instructor, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Larry Korbes and the Connecticut College professor, George Daughn, left their respective institutions. Combs once served with a woman cadet who was also a Connecticut College graduate, on the "Dauntless." Many West Point exchange students at the Coast Guard take classes at Connecticut College. "They must come with this in mind," Combs laughed. Connecticut College students take mostly science and math courses at the Academy, and Cadets study liberal arts and dance at Conn. Coast Guard Cadets face challenges that most students do not realize. They must learn "not just the vocabulary of an academic discipline, but the vocabulary of a [military] way of life," Combs said. "We are producing the Coast Guard leaders of tomorrow, and if cadets don't aspire to be commanding officers, then we have missed the boat," he continued. Even if graduates eventually leave the Coast Guard they benefit from their training. Combs explained, "I don't know of an unemployed Coast Guard Academy graduate...they must be competitive [while in the Coast Guard]. Many in the civilian sector are not that competitive." But now that competitiveness is taught in a humane fashion. Cadets have many responsibilities, and while they "are pulled in different directions it is important that they are not drawn and quartered." Through 1959 and 1963, a massive building campaign was conducted at the Academy by Admiral Leamy. In the book, Athens and Sparta, one of Combs' favorite authors, Lovell, presents the thesis that within institutions there are persons who function as change agents, and Combs called Leamy one such change agent in the history of the Academy. In Rear Admiral Matteson and Captain Combs, the Coast Guard has found two more such change agents. These two men work diligently together to promote both social justice and moral responsibility.

Who Belongs to That Voice?

by Jed Low
Features Editor

Aspen is the mechanical woman who speaks to us on the telephone. She informs us of our messages, helps us locate fellow students, notifies us of system errors, and performs numerous other helpful and gracious services. She is wholeheartedly devoted to remedying any of our telecommunications problems, expect for last week. She is always compliant, always polite, and can be depended upon twenty-four hours a day. In other words, she is the antithesis of what it means to be human.

One might consider her the perfect bureaucrat; no one has to pay her, she is never late to work, she needs no health benefits or coffee breaks, and does not require an office with a view. Maybe Aspen's family and friends should replace our entire bureaucracy. Imagine how much money we could save in taxes! Consider all the confusion and waste that would be eliminated. Unfortunately, it would be a very impersonal bureaucracy, to say the least. Consider talking to Aspen's brother when applying for a marriage license from City Hall.

Aspen and all of her computer friends are slowly taking over the world. Aspen has taken someone's job. An unemployed operator out there must be angry because he was replaced by an automated speech exchange network. Automation has not only affected the phone industry; autoworkers in Detroit, vegetable canners in Winemucca, Nebraska, and dairy farmers in Iowa have all felt the intrusion of technology.

It is interesting to note how computers have intruded upon our everyday lives. Toyotas literally suggest disengaging the parking break as well as putting on a seatbelt while Nikon cameras instruct the amateur photographer to rewind film properly. Before we know it, televisions will tell viewers to go read a book.

It is beginning to seem that computers are superior to humans in more areas than once thought. Aspen and her friends will undoubtedly take more human jobs. But that is the price of technology. If we are going to modernize, we must replace people.

I wonder what Aspen does when she is not helping a human. Imagine existing only when you are talking or instructing someone. Yes, of course, she is alive all the time somewhere in the depths of computer memory. But does she think when she is silent? Or does she simply cease to exist? I feel sorry for her; she has no beliefs, thoughts, or emotions. She is simply noises generated by a machine, a poor facsimile of a human.

On the other hand, she is spared of the lunacy of life. She is never depressed or enlightened, hurt or happy. She is simply turned off.

The next time Aspen is speaking to you, pity her meager existence. But realize she is considered a better employee than a human. Also, consider that when you hang up, she no longer exists.

Hidden in Harris

by Kevin Head
Associate Features Editor

Welcome to the second edition of Hidden in Harris. Today I would like to reveal four new and interesting ideas from the Harris food line. Remember, this is not a column bad-mouthing Harris' cuisine, rather it is a way for the students to spice up their meals and to make them more interesting. So, wet your lips and get ready for some very tantalizing new recipes.

VEGGIE SURPRISE

The veggie surprise, suggested by Heather Pierce, '91, consists of spaghetti noodles and assorted vegetables. First, take Harris' famous spaghetti, add tomatoes, broccoli, peppers or carrots, (depending on your individual tastes, your selection of vegetables may vary from ours). Finally, mix in a generous serving of Italian dressing, either creamy or oil and vinegar. The final result is a yummy mix between pasta salad and pasta primavera.

HOMEMADE YOGURT DRESSING

For those of you who are not satisfied with just plain old regular house dressing, Jeannie Thomma, '91, proposes this new spicy concoction. First take two portions of plain yogurt and mix it in with one portion of mustard. Then, put in a pinch of lemon sauce and pepper. And for those of you who like your salads sweet, Sweet 'N Low may be the solution. As disgusting as it may sound, Jeannie assures us that it is delicious.

CINNAMON TOAST PITA

This delicious recipe is for all those people who actually do get up for breakfast. The main ingredients are a whole wheat pita, butter (margarine for those who are health conscious) and cinnamon sugar. If you did not know before, cinnamon sugar is available upon request in the lunch line at Harris, as well as at Smith-Burdick and other fine dining halls. For starters, spread butter into the pita, sprinkle the inside liberally with cinnamon sugar and put it through the toaster once, or twice for a crunchier result. The butter melts inside the pita, so it is alright to put it in the toaster, no chance of starting one of those messy toaster fires. Then enjoy one of the best tasting breakfasts you can get at Harris.

THE RUSSIAN SANDWICH

The Russian sandwich is another veggie treat, invented by Alice Maggin, '91. It is an open-faced sandwich on pumpernickle bread, topped with tomatoes, cheese, and bean sprouts to make it crunchy. The sandwich should then be microwaved until the cheese starts to bubble. After the sandwich has been thoroughly nuked, you need only to apply the final touch, Russian salad dressing. The result is another great tasting Harris meal.

Stay tuned for next issue when we mix chocolate syrup, tuna fish, and croutons!

Cibes Addresses Supporters

Cibes, a strong party supporter and personal friend of O'Neill, did not declare his candidacy until March, after the governor had announced that he would not seek another term.

O'Neill refused to officially endorse either Democratic candidate until after the primary. Maggiore supported this action since O'Neill represents a tired old regime in the minds of many voters. He stated, "If O'Neill [had] actually committed to Cibes, it would probably [have] hurt Cibes more than . . . help."

Another result of Cibes' late entry into the race was his low name recognition among state voters. Campaign manager Jonathan Peltó, a political coordinator for the state Democratic party and Assistant Majority Leader of the state House of Representatives, struggled with about 20 staff members to overcome Cibes' low profile in the state with little funding in a short period of time. Their efforts seemed to pay off, as a direct correlation was noted between areas where Cibes and his staff campaigned heavily and areas where he won a large majority of votes.

Early returns Tuesday night were strongly skewed in favor of Cibes. Results began trickling in at 8:30 p.m., and Cibes carried many of the first towns with a 2 to 1 margin. The atmosphere at his campaign headquarters in Hartford was jubilant.

By 8:55, however, Peltó had lost much of the early optimism as it became clear that Cibes was not carrying the essential First District. The returns by that time were falling

"a little bit short," according to Peltó. He continued to state that voting trends in the First District were "not going the way that we needed it to."

By 9:30, the atmosphere was subdued as later returns were indicative of a strong Morrison victory. One supporter dejectedly stated, "We lost control . . . right around twenty after nine."

Cibes arrived at the headquarters at 9:35. He was accompanied by his wife Peg and daughter Lia. He immediately began to speak, thanking his staff and supporters. He proceeded to congratulate his opponent "for a sweeping victory in the state of Connecticut" and concede his loss.

Cibes stated that "we should all be very proud" of the outcome of the campaign. He then pledged his support to the Democratic party, explaining, "We all want a governor who can get the job done. That is an ideal that all Democrats cherish."

He continued, "I will always be a Democrat . . . [and] we will all stand behind the standard bearer of the Democratic party . . . I think we all need to unite behind the principles of the Democratic party."

Cibes concluded his speech by stressing the fact that the issues he raised in his campaign would not disappear and that his political career was not over. He quoted William Lloyd Garrison, the founder of the anti-slavery publication The Liberator, who provided Cibes' campaign motto: "I will not equivocate, I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch, and I will be heard."

College Applauds Wiesel and Alumna Hess Myers

hearts of the world to awaken and arise to a new consciousness.

Gaudiani opened the ceremony by welcoming the honored guests and the audience with a few words in Yiddish.

She said Wiesel challenges individuals to "reach out with compassion, and to overcome hatred" just as he has done within his own life. She later added, "[he has] emerged from the kingdom of night in order to keep the memory alive."

Gaudiani credited Jo Ann Hess Myers, '67, who donated the generous $1.4 million to establish the chair, and other members of the group, who had seen the need for Judaic studies and planned for five years the endowment of such a chair.

Myers addressed the audience expressing her pride to be involved in this new step for the college. "The Jewish tradition teaches us that we must learn in order to know; that we must learn in order to teach; finally, and most importantly, we must learn in order to do," she said.

Jean Handley, '48, chair of the Board of Trustees, and Dorothy James, provost and dean of faculty, presented Wiesel with an honorary doctorate from Connecticut College.

Gaudiani's introduction was very memorable for Wiesel. Saying that a writer should be introduced with his own words, the president orated one of Wiesel's short stories, "The Watch." In conclusion of the ceremony, Gaudiani gave Wiesel a watch to symbolize his friendship with the college community.

Lacing his speech with humor, Wiesel said, "I'm afraid that if I was a candidate for the chair in my name, I wouldn't get it."

Soviet Writers Transcend Language Barriers

ing Soviet writers are much lower now. But, Golishev was quick to point out that the effect of such boundaries is not important in the outward sense but in "how they affect the creative force within."

When asked their reactions as writers to the new freedoms for print in the Soviet Union, Beck replied, "What is being written now is . . . wonderful, unheard of . . . out of the cellar."

As an editor, Beck encourages the young poets she publishes, "all that is young, independent, and talented." She also remarked that many Russian "journals are busy trying to repay the debt." Meaning that they are trying to publish the "poetry kept in drawers."

Popov described his interests as a writer involving "the sensory world . . . the colorful and the grotesque." He explained his style of writing by describing its origins.

"Our life in the Soviet Union varies markedly from life in the United States. They say we in Russia live in a madhouse. That is why in the U.S.S.R. it is much easier to become a surrealist writer. Since childhood we are told we are surrounded by enemies . . . should we open up the icebox there may be an enemy," said Popov.

One question concerned whether the authors believed that in the absence of the struggle between Soviet writers and the State would change the Soviet style of writing.

Golishev responded, "The matter is not the pressure on the individual but how he [the individual] allows this pressure to enter his psyche."

Brodsky said, "The great things that have emerged from the pens of Russian writers . . . came into being long before the revolution. Art . . . the genius doesn't need history."

If there were a black spot on the program, it would be found in the poor attendance at the symposium events.

One student expressed his astonishment, "There is a Nobel laureate at our school willing to answer anything we ask! Where is everybody?"

Beck remarked that in Russia poets are revered by the people, "People would be hanging from lamps to hear Brodsky in Russia."

One explanation for this was provided by Brodsky, "A great deal of Russian poetry did not see the dark of print" and so was memorized by the people.

There is a great contrast between this rapport and the very minimal effect American poets have on society in the United States.

Brodsky said, "The plight of the American poet is a wonderful one . . . It causes a poet to think 'What am I doing this for?'" According to Brodsky, being away from the limelight is a much "healthier situation for poets."

MSSC members meet quarterly with the Board of Trustees

MSSC Maintains Strength in Diversification Efforts

by Chris McDaniel
Associate News Editor

Devoted to improving the environment and curriculum for minority students on campus, the Minority Student Steering Committee (MSSC) has played a major role in diversifying the college since its inception four years ago.

On February 20, 1986, concerned members of UMOJA and SOAR submitted a "Statement of Expression" to Oakes Ames, former president of the college. This document was intended to inform the administration of problems faced by students of color and other minority students at Connecticut College.

The lack of seriousness displayed by the administration and the failure of other attempts to communicate concerns with the administration frustrated the students.

In light of the importance of the issues, the students decided that more drastic measures were warranted. This strong concern for the welfare of students of color and other minority students led to what is now known as the Fanning Hall takeover of 1986.

The takeover of Fanning Hall was instrumental in the creation of an established organization designed to keep the administration informed of minority student's needs. This organization, MSSC, has been responsible for many changes to the Connecticut College campus.

Some notable achievements of the MSSC include the establishment of an affirmative action policy, the relocation of Unity House to main campus, social sensitivity training for staff, changes in college curriculum, minority scholars conferences, and increased minority student representation on campus.

According to Grissell Hodge, director of Unity House, MSSC's past accomplishments are continually matched by current efforts. Some major concerns are the need for more minority faculty members, not just visiting professors, and permanent curriculum changes that would reflect greater representation of minority groups.

As for the future of MSSC, Hodge hopes that the committee will "be able to maintain the high level of productivity" it has demonstrated in the past. Also, Hodge believes that it is time that the administration takes more of an active role in minority student affairs, rather than relying on the work and pressure from the MSSC to get things done.

In an interview with Sabrina Durand, '92, chair of MSSC, and Masuko Tamura, '92, president of CCASA and former chair of MSSC, Durand discussed some of the future goals of the MSSC.

The committee would like to see minority advisors in counseling services, a more diverse faculty, changes in the school curriculum, and revisions to the racial harassment policy.

Tamura and Durand concurred that it was necessary to implement the changes that the MSSC desires in order to attract and retain minority students on campus.

Durand noted that despite the administration's desire to prepare students for the "global decade," the curriculum currently reflects a European, rather than world, viewpoint.

Although Tamura and Durand stress that many major changes need to be made on campus, they believe that the administration is genuinely interested in working with the MSSC. Tamura only criticized the fact that "it is such a slow process" and that the administration should try to initiate change on its own rather than relying too heavily on MSSC initiatives.

In conclusion, Durand expressed concern over the fact that faculty were not signing up for the racial awareness workshops that she believes should be mandatory. Tamara agreed, saying, "If professors are ignorant about minority issues... then the students will be as well."

MSSC meetings are held at Unity on Fridays at 3:00 p.m. Anyone interested is welcome.

College Plans One of 1,470 Vigils for Children

by Sarah Huntley
News Editor

Members of the college and local communities will join individuals gathering worldwide on Sunday, September 23 in a vigil recognizing the desperate plight of children and the issues to be addressed by international leaders at the World Summit for Children.

The Summit, scheduled for September 29-30, will bring leaders from over 74 countries together at the United Nations to discuss for the first time the myriad issues affecting children in the 1990s.

This meeting has been described by national vigil organizers "the largest gathering of heads of state and government in history."

According to a UNICEF pamphlet on the event, "The overall aim of the World Summit is to put children high and firmly on the agenda of the 1990s, giving them priority - or 'first call' - on the world's resources in good times or bad, war or peace."

Statistics show that 40,000 of the world's children die each day from malnutrition and vaccine preventable diseases. In the United States, one in every five children lives in poverty. Between 9 million and 12 million American children have no health insurance. Globally, nearly 100 million primary school age children are not enrolled in an education program.

Some of the targets expected to be addressed at the international meeting are universal child immunization, acute respiratory infections, malnutrition, water and sanitation, the rights of children and education.

Over 1470 vigils in 75 countries have been organized for Sunday in observance of the Summit.

The vigil at the Connecticut College location will be held on Sunday at 8:00 p.m. on the green behind Harkness Chapel.

The vigil is being organized by Steve Schmidt, chaplain of the college, Anais Troadec, director of OVCS, Bonnie Allison, professor of child development, Jenn Freeman, '93, SGA public relations director, and Jackie Soteropoulos, '92, president of SOAR and house senator of Blackstone.

At the SGA Assembly meeting on Thursday, members voted unanimously in support of a resolution sponsored by Freeman upholding the planned efforts on behalf of children in the United States and the world.

Freeman said in the resolution, "If the World Summit is successful, if there is commitment to eradicate the shameful large-scale deaths and widespread malnutrition of the world's children, we will be giving a gift to the people of the new century."

In addition to attending the vigil, UNICEF representatives urge individuals to become involved by educating themselves about the situation of children, supporting organizations working for children, pressing for political changes and encouraging employers to provide child care and maternity leave options.

Students Continue Psychology Journal

by Carlos Garcia
The College Voice

The Psychology Journal, a noted publication on campus until 1965, was reinstituted last year and will continue to be published, reviving a temporarily lost tradition.

Begun through the ideas of recent graduate, Rachael Sachs, a board of ten students, and the help of faculty advisor, Joan Chrisler, the Journal made its return last year after a twenty four year absence.

This year the board is run by co-editors, Amy Lebowitz, '91, and Linda Szymanski, '91. Other members of the board have to be elected to the Psi Chi National Honor Society of Psychology. In order to be elected, a student has to be nominated, maintain a high G.P.A., and have a certain number of courses for her or his major.

The journal contains the works of undergraduate students, graduate students, and faculty members. Anyone involved in the psychology field can submit works to the board for possible publication.

Generally, the works cover experiments for classes, honors theses, independent studies, and graduate papers. Last year ten papers were selected out of a highly competitive pool of twenty, each running about seven pages in length. Already this year, ten papers have been submitted to the board, which estimates at least twenty more will arrive before the final selections.

The journal's presence gives the Psi Chi Chapter at the college more recognition. It is expected that the journal will be ready for presentation at the Psi Chi Conference to be held in April.

The journal is also available to the students for $5 and is not just intended for psychology majors. Titles of works published include "The Performance of Helping Behavior on a College Campus vs. a Military School," "Differences in Gender and Major of Students in Leadership Positions at Connecticut College," "Physical Design of a Good Playground," and "Insomnia."

"The journal was created to renew excitement around student research and its publication," said Lebowitz. "It's a good first step for publications in journals as many other schools don't offer a place for the works of the students," added Szymanski. These students will be the main producers of this year's journal, and will be instrumental in making this tradition at Conn continue for years to come.

Finance Committee Starts Review of Club Requests for Student Activities Funds

by Jon Finnimore
The College Voice

As the new school year begins, the 1990-91 Finance Committee is busy at work allocating monies to the various campus organizations.

The student population each year determines the total amount of money available. Funds are $135 per student, an increase of five dollars from last year, included within each student's tuition. According to Michael Sandner, '91, SGA vice president and Finance Committee chair, the Registrar and Accounting office estimates this year's campus population to be 1,610 students, setting the working budget at

The criteria for allocating the money are divided into two main parts, explained Sandner. The first criteria is the factual criteria, which includes "fund-raising efforts in the past, the club's purpose in continuing, its history of debt, and the necessity of (individual club's) requests."

The second one is based on the "concept" of the club. "Although they don't apply to all clubs," said Sandner, "we look at diversity awareness, campus-wide relevance, and faculty/student interaction."

One complaint this year was of a lack of publicity on of the deadline for budget requests. Sandner agreed that "this was a problem. Not enough clubs pre-registered last spring." This, he said, was due to the absence of Trudy Flanery, last year's coordinator of student activities, for the last few weeks of the semester. Because the lack of pre-registered clubs, Sandner and other members of the Finance Committee could not contact people this fall. Signs were posted around campus and an all-campus mailing was done.

Thirty-seven clubs filed budget requests by the September 12 deadline.

This year, to be eligible for financial assistance, a club needs to have a registered constitution approved by Connecticut College. Sandner also said that "clubs that are exclusionary, . . . such as the Co Co Beaux" are not eligible for funds. Any new clubs, or clubs that missed the deadline, may still be able to receive financial assistance if they approach the board. Such clubs may be able to obtain aid from the "Club Improvement Fund." This money is usually allocated at a later date.

Private hearings were held this past weekend between each organization and the Finance Committee. The committee will hold executive sessions September 19-21 and 24 to determine the fund allocation.

After the committee makes its decisions, the house senators will receive the budget. Students are encouraged to voice their opinions about the budget with their senators before SGA votes on the proposal on September 27. If the SGA approves the budget, it will be taken to each dorm for final student input and a dorm vote.

Upon student approval, the funds will be distributed accordingly, and organizations can begin activities for the academic year.

Voice Mail Collapses

by Chris McDaniel
Associate News Editor

"Good afternoon. This is your system manager, it is Wednesday September 12 at 4:45 p.m. The voice mail system has been repaired and is fully operational once again. Mailboxes affected by this problem may have had some messages deleted. If so, when you call into your mailbox you will receive notification of which messages were deleted. Again, thank you for your patience in this matter."

This information was sent through the voice mail system on September 12, made possible by the phone system's innovative "administrative options" feature.

This was an unexpected turn of events for the new phone system.

The system had been flickering day before the actual collapse of voice mail attributed to disk drive burnout, at approximately 8 a.m. on September 12.

According to Tom Makofske, director of computer and information services, the failure "wasn't expected."

He attributed this to the fact that "new systems exercise a lot" and did not find the collapse bewildering.

The disk drive which failed was under a one year manufacturer's warranty and cost nothing to replace. In addition, if some part of the system were to fail after the one year warranty had expired, the college has purchased maintenance contracts.

Makofske said that the college would be watching the system "closely."

Further telecommunications developments occurred this week. After a number of unsuccessful attempts by s to contact Makofske regarding the lack of promised options for student leaders, they went directly to his office in Bill Hall.

Mary Beth Holman, '91, president of the senior class, stated the students' concerns that options such as group distribution had not been activated.

Makofske was unaware that the options had not been activated and took names and extensions of the students who needed the options.

The students were able to use their new options within two hours of the meeting with Makofske.

SGA Sends Letter Urging More Sensitive Scheduling

Yankwitt expressed frustration over a lack of response from Gaudiani to his phone calls and correspondence concerning the matter.

The house senator mailed a letter to Gaudiani last week expressing his concerns. Yankwitt thinks the college may have wanted Parents' Weekend to coincide with the Yo Yo Ma concert. "I feel that certain things are more important than a good concert and college prestige," he said.

Julie Quinn, director of college relations, acknowledged that some students are reluctant to return to college for Parents' Weekend so quickly after the holiday, but explained that there were limited scheduling options.

"This year just got very crowded," she said, "This was really the only weekend that it [Parents' Weekend] fit in."

She said that the committee did discuss the closeness of dates and "There was not a lack of consideration [for Rosh Hashanah]."

This Week in SG Assembly

by Heather D'Auria
The College Voice

At this week's marathon five hour SGA Assembly meeting, committee elections were held and three proposals were passed.

Russ Yankwitt, '92, house senator of Windham, presented a resolution which urges the administration to use more "foresight and sensitivity in planning future events." This resolution resulted from dissatisfaction over the coinciding dates of Parents' Weekend and the Jewish high holiday, Rosh Hoshanah.

SGA hopes to ensure that future school events are not held on religious holidays. After a few alterations, the resolution was passed. It will be sent to Claire Gaudiani, '66, president of the college, Robert Hampton, dean of the college, Joseph Tolliver, dean of Student Life and Aaron Rosenberg, associate chaplain of the college.

A proposal, sponsored by Jenn Freeman, '93, public relations director, was passed expressing SGA's support of children's rights and the United Nations convention on the plight of the child in today's society. Freeman asked for the support of SGA of a candlelight vigil focusing world attention on the plight of children and on the solutions to some universal problems that children encounter in their development.

The proposal was unanimously passed. The vigil will be held on September 23 at 8 p.m. on the Chapel Green.

The third proposal, submitted by Mike Sandner, '92, vice president of SGA, clarifies the processes of constitutional revisions and ratifications. The proposal, which passed 24-1, states that all clubs and organizations have to ratify their constitutions before they receive SGA funding. Revisions to the constitutions must be approved by the Constitution Committee. Also, they may be brought before the Assembly for approval by a majority vote of the Constitution Committee.

The Latest Line on the Latest Movies

J.C. Gives Life to Death Warrant

Christian Schulz
The College Voice

An innocent stranger leans up against a telephone pole, casually smoking a cigarette. Three men approach him, staring at him menacingly. The stranger calmly flicks his cigarette into the gutter. "Go away and leave me alone," he warns them in a voice with just a trace of a French accent. One of the men pulls a knife. They close in. Things look bad for the stranger. Suddenly, the man swats the knife away and kicks the leader in the chest. Almost simultaneously he throws his right elbow into another attacker's nose. In about 1.5 seconds, the tide has been turned, and the one conscious bad guy left goes screaming into the night.

The bad guys never stand a chance, because the man leaning up against the telephone pole is Jean Claude Van Damme, America's newest hero. J.C. is setting a new standard in the action movie biz. He has Arnold's physique, Bruce Lee's lightning quickness, and, unlike his contemporaries, is a decent actor. Ever since his first hit, Blood Sport, Jean Claude Van Damme cannot churn out movies fast enough to keep up with his ever growing collection of devoted fans. This latest picture, though not a classic like Blood Sport, should be enough to satiate his devotees for at least a few months.

The plot of Death Warrant is actually quite complex for a "fight" flick. Jean Claude, a Canadian police officer, is being sent into a Los Angeles jail undercover to investigate a series of murders there. As the movie unfolds, more and more suspects are added and deleted, and as J.C. kicks and punches his way towards finding the killer, he discovers that it's not the prisoners who are doing the killing, it's the cops. And as soon as the cops know he's onto their secret, they decide he has to be eliminated. So they send in the world's most violent and unstoppable criminal, The Sandman. The final confrontation between The Sandman and Jean Claude in the depths of the prison boiler room is perhaps the most exciting climax to a movie I have ever seen.

I'll tell you folks, this movie is worth seeing. It has plenty of bone crunching, eye gouging, and all the other action movie stand-bys anybody could want, all centered on an exciting and innovative plot. If there is one complaint, it's that not once in this movie did Jean Claude do one of his famous splits. But hey, nobody, and no movie is, perfect. Catch you all next week. Later.

JAWS: THE REVENGE (PG)

Believe it or not, Michael Caine missed receiving an Oscar to film this asinine excuse for a sequel. The mechanical grey terror is back, and this time it's personal. That's right. A shark with the mental capacity of a garden slug follows the remaining Brody clan (sans Roy Scheider) from the freezing winter waters of Cape Cod all the way to the Caribbean in three days. See the shark eat Chief Brody, Jr., for Christmas dinner! Scream as the shark attacks innocent tourists vacationing on crowded beaches! Laugh as the murderous shark munches on airplanes and powerboats! We do not claim to know Michael Caine very well, but we would assume that he is extremely embarrassed to star in this dud. We do not blame him and neither will you if you are unfortunate enough to rent it.

THE THING (R)

This movie, a John Carpenter remake of the 1950's classic of the same name, is pure, unadulterated barfbag mania. However, you will enjoy being nauseous through this one. It is exciting, suspenseful, and has the potential to scare the living daylight out of you. Ennio Morricone adds an eerie soundtrack as well. Kurt Russell and Keith David lead a cast of Antarctic pioneers who spend the first half of the movie getting high, drunk, playing computer chess, and flying helicopters in 40-knot winds. They spend the second half running away from an intelligent alien chameleon whose apparent goal is to overrun the planet. In addition, this flick contains an overbearing tense scene which involves everyone being tied together and a blood test. This is male bonding at its most stressful, and the gory and amazing special effects make it a feast for the eyes. It would be a horror to miss it.

BAD INFLUENCE (R)

The only redeeming value of this movie is its unintentional irony, as "bad influence" Rob Lowe ruins his nerdy friend's (James Spader) life with a videotape of Spader enjoying the pleasures of a friendly neighborhood prostitute. Lowe a bad influence? HA! HA! HA! They should have called this Bad Acting. Poor Dan could not get past the first fifteen minutes of this poor excuse to waste studio money. Even poorer Sean was just too tired to press "stop," so he saw the entire movie. Bad is a good adjective for this movie, which had bad acting, bad editing, a really bad screenplay (absolutely no character development), a bad soundtrack, and bad directing. Leave this Lowe flop off your list of must-see new releases.

DAN no review SEAN no such luck

PRINCE OF DARKNESS (R)

John Carpenter did great "Things" earlier in his career but this attempt lacks in major departments. Mainly, this movie just is not scary. It tries to combine the satanic mastery of The Exorcist with the religious fervor of The Seventh Sign. Unfortunately, it is unsuccessful in both. Instead of creating tension or suspense, Carpenter opts for bloody faces popping onto the screen and spaced out street schizos (one of which is rock legend Alice Cooper) running out of alleys with knives. The movie is not satanic enough for our tastes. It has your standard projectile vomiting and basic possession, but it is not done as craftily as it could be. The plot is rather foolish, and the soundtrack (composed by John Carpenter) is annoying. The acting is passable. Victor Wong has the lead role as an open-minded physics professor, and Donald Pleasance co-stars as a terrified priest. Stick with Carpenter's non-religious and mindlessly violent films.

INTERNAL AFFAIRS (R)

Richard Gere stars as a twisted and corrupt policeman who fornicates with most of the married women in the greater L.A. area. His nemesis is played by Andy Garcia (Untouchables, Black Rain), who looks surprisingly like Mark Frieberger, '92. The supporting roles were all filled by no-name beauties, who seem to enjoy most of their on-screen appearances with Gere. It is a well-written script about deception, bribery, corruption and adultery, most of which revolves around Gere. Richard Gere fans may not enjoy this one, as the actor plays one of the biggest scum bags to grace the screen in years. Watch it prepared for incredibly twisted violence. Gere's acting was incredibly convincing, and Garcia showed signs of a true star. "Gere up" for a great time.

Tennis Team Embarks on Season With Two Victories

by Kim Kress
Sports Editor
and Carlos Garcia
The College Voice

Off to a strong start, the women's tennis team has an excellent chance to improve upon last season's record of 4-5.

Coach Sheryl Yeary has a good mix of both newcomers and veterans on the squad. "I think there's a really good balance between the older people who provide the right leadership and the five freshmen who are technically and competitively very solid," Yeary said.

The team is led by senior co-captains Sarah Hurst and Pinar Taskin. Holding a lifetime record of 67-22 and looking to break more team records this fall, Hurst is Conn's number one player for the fourth straight year.

The Camels opened their season on the road this past Wednesday, crushing Clark University 8-1. Hurst, Jennifer Preuss, '94, Beth Grossman, '93, Carter LaPrade, '92, and Katy Jennings, '93, were all victorious in singles. Hurst and Grossman teamed up to win their doubles match, as did the teams of Christa Holohan, '94, and Christine Wadodo, '94, at number two and Suzanne Larson, '92, and Aimee Beauchamp, '93 at number three.

On Thursday, the Camels faced Bryant in their first home match of the season. Once again, Conn showed no mercy as they demolished Bryant 8-1. Hurst, Preuss, Grossman, LaPrade, Larson, and Michelle Lachance, '94, all produced singles wins. In doubles, Hurst and Grossman, as well as Jennings and LaPrade teamed up for victories.

Right now the Camels' record

Liza Wallace/The College Voice

stands at 2-0, since their match against Simmons scheduled for Saturday was rained out. If these early matches are any indication, Coach Yeary and her troops should have a great fall season.

Ruggers Ready for Fall Season

by Kim Kress
Sports Editor

The Rugby Club is looking good as the members get set to embark on their fall season. Under the direction of team captains Anton Malko, '91, Jim Greenleaf, '91, and the club president Tod Mercy, '91, the team hopes to improve on its spring record of 3-2.

The possibility of this is excellent since the club will play solely against fellow Division III schools for the first time. Last spring the team won all its contests against Division III opponents. Therefore, according to Malko, "This translates possibly into a successful season."

Unfortunately, a lot of the club's members who played in the spring are now juniors and spending the semester studying abroad. In addition, as Malko pointed out, the team lost its entire second row to graduation. However, a number of players are returning to the team and should be able to make up for that loss.

Returning players for the 1990 fall rugby season are: Day Post, '92, Adam Gimbel, '91, Doug Hahn, '91, John Fahey, '92, Chris Simo, '93, Andrew Hebler, '92, Gregg Levinson, '91, Mike Sandner, '91, Dan Dwyer, '92, Andrea Pandolfini, '92, Rich Mullen, '92, Pete Gerjarusak, '92, and Travis Connors, '93.

Another good sign for the club is that a number of freshmen have decided to play rugby for the fall season. These new members include Dave Dykeman, Josh Levine, Nicholas Swan, David Barron, Pete Esselman, and Dana Rousmaniere, all members of the class of '94.

The rugby club will be playing seven games this fall. Home games will be played on the green in back of Freeman. If you love a hard-hitting sport with lots of action then rugby is for you. So get out there and support your club rugby team. It certainly will not be dull.

Talent and Enthusiasm Abound on Field Hockey Team

by John Fischer
The College Voice

The Connecticut College field hockey team is looking forward to what could be one of its best seasons ever. They have lost only two seniors and are returning talented players at every position.

Last year, the Camels had a record of 5-7-1, though they played much better than the record indicates. Four of their losses came by only one goal, including a tough 2-1 overtime loss to Southern Connecticut State. The season was highlighted by an impressive 4-1 start as well as the team's first ever victory over Trinity.

This should be one of their best seasons ever. Led by fourth-year head coach Anne Parmenter, the Camels are ready to surpass last season's success. Parmenter says, "The girls know what it feels like to play tough rivals like Trinity and Tufts. They have been there before and are excited to revenge last year's losses."

Parmenter is also very impressed with the morale on the squad. "[Both JV and varsity] are a very tight group and are all friends off of the field. There is a great sense of responsibility on the team, and they really support each other well."

With fifteen returning players, the team is strong and deep at all positions. On attack, the Camels are led by Carter Wood, '93. Wood, the leading goal-scorer in 1989, is joined by Jenny Garbutt, '91. Garbutt is the ninth-leading scorer in Camel history and should add considerable firepower to the offense. Senior Jill DelloStritto and Erica Bos, '92, round out the attack position for Conn. Bos, whose 1989 season was cut short by an injury, could be a key contributor.

At midfield, the Camels also showcase impressive returning talent. Sarah Ball, '93, had an strong rookie campaign and will be a solid contributor. Junior Abbey Tyson, last year's leading scorer and team MVP will also be a formidable force. Kristen Martin, '91, is recovering from knee surgery and is expected to make a strong comeback. Suzanne Walker, '93, and Erin McLoughlin, '91, will also see considerable playing time in this experienced unit.

The Camels, while strong on offense, can also fall back on a reliable and consistent defense. Senior co-captain Diane Stratton leads the group. Amy Norris, '92, Nikki Hennessey, '93, and Lauren Moran, '94, join Stratton in Conn's defensive scheme. Goalies Laurie Sachs, '92, and senior co-captain Jen Schumacher will both see playing time in net. Together, they hold almost every goalkeeping record in the history of Conn field hockey.

The Camels have already played their first game of the season, defeating Assumption by a score of 3-0. Wood scored the Camels' first goal of the game. Then, after Bos tallied for the second goal, Wood finished up the scoring with her second goal of the game. Conn is now (1-0) on the year. Their next game is Saturday, September 15 at Wesleyan.

The first home game for the Camels is on September 22 against Bates. The Camels play their home games on Dawley Field, down by the river behind the Athletic Center. The team really needs your support, so show your school spirit and come watch your field hockey team win at home.

The Intramural season gets into full swing on Monday as the 6-a-side soccer league begins play on Chapel Field. The Flag Football league opened this past Tuesday with twelve teams vying for the Super Bowl title to be contested Nov. 11.

Flag Football is comprised of two very competitive divisions, the Gaudiani Division features E.M. Airplanes, FWA, Hopkins' two TD passes. David, last year's Super Bowl champs, opened defense of their crown by whipping a respectable frosh KBees squad, 28-0. Ken Widman, '94, scored two TDs for David, while Cristo Garcia, '92, threw for two TDs, ran for one, and turned in an INT on defense.

The 6-a-side soccer league will feature 14 teams. Coed softball is also a new sport this fall and will feature 8 teams playing on Sundays. Another new intramural offering will be team tennis which has 8 teams ready to compete in self-scheduling three-match format. Each team has a male and a female member playing an 8-game pro set in singles, and then a 10-game set in mixed doubles.

Take advantage of the good weather and get on a team if you know someone that has submitted a team prior to the deadlines. Rosters aren't frozen until the second games in any league.

Fall Intramurals Set to Begin the Four Horseman, Special Forces, David, and Dry Season. The Hampton Division has Shalom Y'All, Can't Touch This, Bula Suvas, Jehovah's Army, KBees, and Moondenhops.

In flag football openers, sophomore Matt Shea's five TD passes (three to Carl Newman, '92), led Special Forces to a 35-0 pasting of Jehovah's Army. In the nightcap, E.M. Airplanes rode junior Jon Krawczyk's TD run and TD pass to get a 14-7 win over Can't Touch This. On Thursday, Bula Suvas (from Fiji) defeated FWA 21-7 behind sophomore Matt

Every sports community has a great streak with which to identify. New Yorkers treasure Lou Gehrig's streak, Seattle fans will forever remember Steve Largent's streak, and Indianapolis — well, maybe not every sports community. Here at Conn, Farzin Azarm, '92, has captivated the campus with his heroic Consecutive Games Scoreless streak which, after this Saturday's Homecoming game, has now reached 33 games — a mark once thought unattainable by soccer players around the world. Dob and Pops decided to call up and old friend who has been known to kick the ball around once in awhile. When we asked our venerable friend to comment on Azarm, the man responded, "That little red-headed Iranian has ten times the ability I ever dreamed of having. He's just caught a few bad breaks — like his inability to run and kick the ball at the same time." And oh, by the way, that man was Pélé.

WARNING: Any fan witnessing the opening day game between the Cincinnati Bengals and the New York Jets should take note. If you were exposed to the Jets' new puke green pants for over an hour, you should know that they induced massive vomiting and cases of radiation sickness in over 3234 people nation-wide. Our advice: stop, drop, and roll and then call your local physician. . . In last year's NFL merchandising race, the Chicago Bears lead all teams with a 14% chunk of the market followed closely by the 49ers and Raiders. In case you were wondering, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers nabbed a .00012% share of merchandise sales as a guy named Maurice purchased a Bucs air freshener for his '73 Camaro from a convenience store in Boca Raton.

Monday Night Pick

Last week: Saints plus five versus 49ers. Final score: 49ers 13, Saints 12. Dob and Pops start off the season on the right foot with a winner. Dob and Pop's record: 1-0. This week: the upstart Chiefs travel to unfriendly Mile High. The Broncos are favored by five and a half. We like the Broncos to rebound big after a disappointing opening day loss to the Raiders. Take the Broncos and lay the points.

Miscellaneous

After heated opening day contests in front of a sold-out crowd at Chapel Green, our sources have told us that the boys in Vegas apparently want a part of the IM flag football action. In the big David-Can't Touch This showdown this week, the early line has been set at David by three. Commissioner Mark Fallon, '92, in an outrage stated, "We will not condone, nor tolerate that type of immoral behavior." However, despite efforts to beef up security, a seedy looking Jimmy the Greek was spotted by Schmoozing assistant Jeff Legro, '92, behind Harkness dorm on Sunday. . . Only in the U.S. can a guy named "Hot Rod" make twenty times more than the President. John "Hot Rod" Williams just inked a five year, 26.5 million dollar deal with the Cavs, making him the NBA's highest paid player, despite the fact that he doesn't start. Dob and Pops refuse to speculate on the origin of his nickname.

Volleyball Team Set To Strike

by Dan Levine
The College Voice

High hopes abound as the Camels step on to the volleyball court this season. They possess leadership, talent, motivation, and excitement to get underway.

This season the women's volleyball program welcomes a new head coach, Darryl Bourassa. Bourassa brings inspiration and new life into a program that needs a breath of fresh air. He brings with him an extensive and impressive background. He has played collegiate volleyball, U.S. Marine Corps volleyball and has played on a beach circuit. Bourassa's coaching background includes several women's recreational teams and USVBA teams. This season at Conn marks his Division III coaching debut.

The Camels are looking forward to a bright future out on the court. Leading the way are captains Debbie Garrett, '91, and Paula Bettencourt, '93, as well as returning seniors Nicole Casanova, Jenny Gelbard, and Lynda Szymanski. Eliza Brown, '93, Teresa Hsiao, '93, Melanie Hughes, '93, Deb McKenna, '93, Cindy Morris, '93, Bonnie Silberstein, '93 and Kari Hendricksen, '92, should also help facilitate the job of the new coach and make this a fantastic season. Transfer student Susie Cascio, '92, and freshmen Becca Cullen and Jen Kerney are three new players who will add dimension as well as stability for the future. The team is well rounded and each player will fill an important role as the season progresses.

Since this is his first year coaching at the collegiate level, Bourassa does not know exactly what to expect.

He is willing to work as hard as he can to make this a successful season, though he realizes it will not be easy.

"This is going to be hard for them and for me," Bourassa said. "We don't know what kinds of teams are out there, but judging so far we have a good shot. I can almost assure we will do better than [last year's] 3-16 record, and at the end of the season the girls will leave with a smile."

The players are very excited about the upcoming season and are especially enthusiastic about their coach.

"He loves the game, he is motivated to teach, and he is very knowledgeable," Garrett said. "We have a good attitude to win and we'll do pretty well."

"The coach can turn the program around," Gelbard believes. "He knows what he's doing, and we have a lot to look forward to. We have a much better attitude than we had in past years, and there is a lot of excitement about this season."

All in all, things are looking up for the women's volleyball squad.

They have an excellent attitude, they have a great new coach, and they want to win. Everything points to a super season. Now, only time will tell.

A Long Day for the Camels

Men's Soccer Falls Just Short in the Homecoming Game

by Christian Schulz
The College Voice

After watching the women's team defeat Amherst 1-0 in the waning moments of overtime, the men's soccer team took the field with high hopes for their opening game against the Jumbos of Tufts. For most of the game, it appeared that the Camels were indeed heading for a victory.

Conn was on the offensive for the entire day, taking 22 shots for the Jumbos' 7. In the first half, forward Rich "Tubby" Carter, '92, fired a shot on goal which deflected off the outstretched hands of the Tufts keeper and fell nicely in front of fellow Conn forward Sung Kim, '92, who knocked it in to give Conn a 1-0 lead. The lead held for most of the game, with the Camels controlling the ball for nearly the entire time. Late in the second half, however, a Tufts player broke through Conn's tough defense and tied up the game. The teams played scoreless for the rest of the half and the game went to overtime.

Conn looked hungry for the win right from the start of the first overtime period. The Camels mounted several attacks, including one heart-breaking offensive in which Conn hit the post three times before finally losing possession. The defense, led by goalie Lou Cutillo, '92, also looked strong. The first overtime period ended with the teams still tied. The game then moved into double overtime. It was then, unfortunately for the Camels, that Tufts broke through Conn's defense and knocked home their second goal.

Conn tried desperately to avenge the goal for the rest of the half, but came up short, and the game ended in a Tufts victory.

Said Conn freshman, Stephan Cantu-Stillie, "The guys worked real hard out there. It's a shame it had to end this way. Unlucky."

Athlete of the Week

This week's award goes to KRISTEN SUPKO, '92, of the women's soccer team. In Saturday's match against Amherst, Supko scored the game's only goal, giving her team the victory. As a result, the Camels head into this week's action with an impressive 2-0 record. KEK
