Toxic Waste at Conn.

by Mike Coffey
The College Voice

With the danger of toxic waste posing a dilemma all across America, the science departments of Connecticut College are taking safeguards against any possible contamination.

According to Vicki Fontneau, safety officer and chemistry lab instructor, toxic chemicals are used most prominently in the chemistry and biology departments with chemistry having an inventory of over 2,300 chemicals.

"Only after the department deems a chemical as a waste will it be prepared for disposal," Fontneau said. Most of the waste is flammable organic material that has been used in the numerous experiments that the department conducts, she said.

Until that time, the waste is held in the new stockroom in the Hale Laboratory, which, due to recent renovations, is better equipped to store the chemicals safely, she added.

John Flibbert, '90, expressed concern over the storing of toxic waste on campus, saying "If the chemical is flammable on campus it poses any threat to the students or faculty, then it should be stored off campus," he said.

Fontneau said that for the disposals they choose the licensed company AETC, Advance Environmental Technologies Company, which was recommended by Pfizer chemicals. AETC, in turn, sent technicians to help identify and categorize all of the chemicals.

Fontneau added that last spring the college hired AETC to haul away 35,550-gallon drums of

At their regular September meeting, the board of trustees of the College formally opened the search to find a successor for President Donald Albee. The trustees adopted the final format of the search committee, which includes six trustees, four faculty and two students, and hopes to have a final candidate by the February trustees meeting.

Not all Custodians to be Replaced

by Thora Poten
Editor-in-Chief

"We haven't hired for the dorms since it opened," Bill Bam, manager of custodial services for Connecticut College, said. Bam is an employee of The Facilities Resources Management (F.R.M.) and has been at the College for a year and a half.

The dispute surrounding the number of vacancies in the custodial staff stems from complaints by the custodians at the College. The Custodians claim that the Administration has refused to hire people to work as custodians in the dorms.

Both Tony Sheridan, the College's director of human resources, and Peter Tveskov, director of facilities operations for the College, have said repeatedly that the College is actively trying to fill the vacancies, but the area's high employment rate makes finding applicants difficult.

Tveskov, in a telephone interview, stressed the importance of looking at the question of the number of vacancies in the custodial staff, in a campus-wide perspective. He said it is not a question of numbers of people working, but rather the number of people. A full-time staff is working the majority of man hours they perform.

To the Editor:

Although the Dean’s philosophy is admirable in theory, in practice it appears to be failing miserably. Rather, it has become license to too many students to inflict harm upon themselves. Much of the student body has abused the trust of the administration, and officials have the right to be disappointed and angry.

I am not going to suggest turning the Connecticut College campus into a mini-police state which would stomp out the substance abuse problem, along with the wonderful qualities for which the college is known and admired. Nor do I pretend to have ready answers to this problem; if a solution was apparent, the problem would have been solved long ago. Several thoughts, however, come to mind.

First, solutions should be sought jointly among the administration, faculty and students, working together; but the administration is responsible for implementing an effective program and, if necessary, should impose one.

Second, the alternatives to weekend substance abuse are too few when there is not enough room. More should be planned.

Third, the administration appears to be turning its back on State law, and thus is encouraging contempt for the law. The law should be enforced.

Fourth, education about the pitfalls of substance abuse appears to be lacking or ineffective. Means of improvement should be considered.

Fifth, residential advisors who live in the dorms should be brought into the process.

Surely helping students to learn that life free from substance abuse can be enjoyable, is consistent with a good liberal arts education.

Very Truly Yours,

What’s In the Water? Conn’s Drinking Water Problem

by John Maggione

Connecticut College may be the intellectual center of New London, but the residents of the city know something that the students of the college do not. This summer, the people of New London were each sent a “Public Notice of Violation” concerning the city’s drinking water. This letter explained that since 1986, the amounts of trihalomethanes in the city’s drinking water have exceeded allowable levels. What this means is that New London drinking water is carcinogenic. The letter went on to explain that the water has “only been” below state standards since 1986, and to remedy the situation, a filtration plant will be built by 1990. Because only “life long” exposure would be dangerous, the water is safe to drink. The Environmental Protection Agency and the Connecticut State Department of Health Services have said that the water is safe to drink under these circumstances. The letter was only sent because of an order from the state. There’s no problem. That statute, part of the Connecticut Public Health Code, was, however, written for a reason. But as we have the right to be told what is told in the food we eat (and thus, lists of ingredients on everything from cereal to cup o’ soup), we should also know what is in our water.

Superintendent of Water, Debbie Marshall Baker, was extremely cooperative in providing The College Voice with literally “everything you ever wanted to know about New London water, but were afraid to ask.” Many students at Conn. are not aware that the water they are drinking is carcinogenic. And did anyone know that that funny taste in the water is chlorine (which, by the way, is wonderful for washing hair), or that the drinking water is unfiltered lake water from Lake Konomoq with a few chemicals added to it? In fact, there are over seventy chemicals in New London drinking water, including supposedly safe levels of propane, arsenic, cyanide, lead, mercury, and four pesticides.

Why Connecticut College students are not told these things, and New London residents are not told unless the state declares chemical levels dangerous, remains unclear. Perhaps the government feels that the water isn’t dangerous. Well, the government has been wrong before, and the peoples’ right to know transcends that argument anyway. Whatever the reason is, it is not good enough.

We are what we eat, and we should know what it is that we are drinking.

Community at Conn.

Rugged Individualism Pervades

by Josh Motta

Ever since I put up my statement “Community at Conn. College. Does it exist?,”121 many people have been asking me, “What do you mean by Community at Conn. College? Community spirit is not the drinking festivals that go on weekly here on campus, but the spirit that arises among Conn. members when a Conn. sports team, such as men’s soccer, is competing against Middlebury for the league championship. Community and its spirit have a much greater power to bring people together than these two examples. But it’s nearly impossible to describe community to someone who has not experienced it. It’s like trying to tell somebody what a watermelon tastes like if they have never tried one. Community is living life with the feeling of togetherness, not just superficially taking part in others’ lives, but really bearing the weight of each other’s joys and frustrations.

The need for community rises out of the problem of the ethics of rugged individualism. This type of individualism calls each one of us to individuality, power, and wholeness. But this ethic is a falacy because it ignores the other half of our human story, which is that in our uniqueness, as separate persons we are in perfect creatures, with many limitations, who need each other, not just for company, but for meaning in our lives whatsoever.

Rugged individualism pervades the Connecticut college campus and America. Ever since I put up my community bulletin around the Conn. campus, more than a dozen people, including staff and students, have reinforced my belief that Conn. College needs more community.

Several students, including myself, would like to get S.G.A. to ratify a proposal for a community support group called “The Conn. Community Club.” I believe it’s important for the members of Conn. College to ask themselves this question honestly: Does community truly exist at Conn. or does this college desperately need it?

Here’s how liberal arts graduates can tally some impressive numbers: Bentley’s Master of Science in Accountancy.

If your liberal arts background isn’t paying off as liberally as you hoped, you should consider Bentley College’s Master of Science in Accounting. The MS program is designed to introduce the fundamentals of accounting, to convey an appreciation of business environment and the important use of the concepts and methods of accounting.

With the strong foundation supplied by a Bentley MBA, you’ll have the credentials to change career paths in the public, private, or government accounting sectors, or to further your present career, which is a liberal benefit indeed.

COMMTHOUGHT
Committee of the Week:

The Board of Trustees

by William Nelson

The College Voice

Many different insights have emerged from the chairperson's seat at the head of the Board of Trustees' table. Yet all these have emerged from the mouths of men—until now.

Brita Stein McNemar brings a number of firsts with her to the chairperson's seat. Not only is she the first woman, but she is also the first Connecticut College graduate to chair the college's Board of Trustees.

What does a new perspective bring to a position that is typically male-dominated? "When I was offered the position," said McNemar, "I was told 'different people need different times—we need you now.'"

"I realized I would not have many more opportunities as this to serve Connecticut College. I felt my long interest in education, which has put me on both sides of the desk, would allow me to apply that experience to the position as chairperson," said McNemar.

"Acting as chairperson allows me to demonstrate my love and commitment to the college," she explained.

McNemar's experience in education began by teaching at a high school level for four years graduating from Connecticut College as a history major in 1967. Since then she has been involved at Dartmouth as both an Assistant Dean and as Assistant Dean of Dartmouth College's Board of Trustees. According to McNemar, some of the greatest moments for McNemar, some of which she elaborated on, "The dedication of the athletic center was a very special moment. This was an exceptionally successful outcome to a very important decision made by the Board. It changed the entire face of life on campus.

"I also recall hearing Barbara Hirschicorn speak at the dedication of the athletic center. It was one of the most memorable as well."

The Board's discussion surrounding the college's policy on investments in South Africa was described by McNemar as memorable as well.

Although two years remain in her term as chairperson, McNemar does not intend to end her dedication to Connecticut College. "A graduate of this college, I feel I am the beneficiary of a fine education from which many intangible gifts. I want to pay the college back through any way I can," said McNemar.

The search for a new college president is at the forefront of the Board's immediate goals. "We need to make a smooth transition to our new president, someone who will lead the college into the 1990's," said McNemar.

The Board is also paying special attention to increasing faculty compensation and benefits, generating resources for the college, and increasing the quality of life outside the classroom as well, according to McNemar.

"As chairperson of the Board, I have the ability to orchestrate all the experience, knowledge, individual talents, and ideas of all the board members," said McNemar. "They're a tough bunch, but the college is really blessed by them.

This year is the fourth year of what was traditionally a lifetime term as chairperson. Recently, however, the term was limited to six years. "This was done to rotate the leadership of the Board and to keep it healthy and active, as so allows different people to do different things in their life and careers.

Four years as chairperson have brought certain highlights to McNemar's moments, McNemar, some of which she elaborated on. "The dedication of the athletic center was a very special moment. This was an exceptionally successful outcome to a very important decision made by the Board.

On the other hand, McNemar does not intend to end her dedication to Connecticut College. "A graduate of this college, I feel I am the beneficiary of a fine education from which many intangible gifts. I want to pay the college back through any way I can," said McNemar.

Spirituality and a Sense of Community

by Alexander Stoddard

"We're emphasizing spirituality and an increased sense of community. Hopefully we are also responding to the need, whether it's the need of members of the campus, of the community, or of the global community," said Father Lawrence LaPointe, Chaplain of Harkness Chapel.

In a poll taken by the Chapel Board at Harkness Chapel in September of 1986, out of 514 respondents 34.6 percent said they were Protestant, 26.8 percent said that they were Catholic, 12.6 percent said they were Jewish, 11.7 percent said they were 'unaffiliated', 3.9 percent were Catholic, 12.6 percent said they were Protestant, 46.7 percent called themselves active, and 34.6 percent said they were 'unaffiliated'. Of those who considered themselves to be Catholic, 58 percent called themselves active, and 34.9 percent said they were inactive. Of those respondents who considered themselves Protestants, 46.7 percent called themselves active, and 39.9 percent said they were inactive. Of those who considered themselves Jews, 52.3 percent called themselves active, and 35.4 percent said they were inactive.

Within the last year, several things have happened to religion on campus, most notably the hiring of Rabbi Neal Schindlin. Jewish, Catholic and Protestant services are conducted regularly at Harkness Chapel and social events for those of different religions are held outside the Chapel as well. With the increased efforts to cultivate different religions at Conn. and to encourage more activity within them, questions have risen as to whether or not the changes made have compromised the traditions upon which the chapel was founded.

According to LaPointe, the Chapel Board based their decision on the fact that although the Chapel is a Christian structure, Mary Harkness endowed it "because of her belief in the imminence of a golden age for college students," and that since the college is no longer a primarily Christian college, they are not violating tradition by taking down the cross. "The Chapel is a part of an organic activity. It is the prayer house of this campus family and as not all members are Christian, it is perhaps more welcoming to approach a building that is not distinctly associated with one faith."

"The Chapel is a part of an organic activity. It is the Prayer House of this campus family."

LaPointe said that they've made the interior of the Chapel more open to other denominations. "The Chapel changes too, it is more than just a token. We're emphasizing the Chapel is a part of an organic activity. It is the prayer house of this campus family and as not all members are Christian, it is perhaps more welcoming to approach a building that is not distinctly associated with one faith."

According to LaPointe, the chapel board decided on the fact that although the chapel is a Christian structure, Mary Harkness endowed it "because of her belief in the imminence of a golden age for college students," and that since the college is no longer a primarily Christian college, they are not violating tradition by taking down the cross. "The Chapel is a part of an organic activity. It is the prayer house of this campus family and as not all members are Christian, it is perhaps more welcoming to approaching a building that is not distinctly associated with one faith."

LaPointe said that the lack of religious activity may result from the age of college students. "It may not be as appealing at this age. We try to provide the opportunity to rekindle religious curiosity. I would like to think that we offer low-threshold opportunities for investigation on the part of the religiously curious." Shaffer said that he felt that the students were not active religiously. "They are defining for themselves what religion is. They might have come from homes where religion was present or not present." "I think that one of the answers is to do more cross-campus things, combining efforts with the Academy. Most students are fumbling with their faith or lack thereof. While people are testing the waters, I think that we should be understanding of their struggle and be there when they need help—not to shove it down their throat," said Wilson.

Rabbi Schindlin said that he sees the removal of the cross as a "positive sign that the college or the Chaplaincy is interested" in the spread of other faiths. It's really a return to the original mission of Harkness Chapel.

When asked about the state of religion among the students on campus, Schindlin said, "I am able to see a growth in interest among Jewish students," but that interest among Jewish students may not come from a purely religious desire. "We do not focus largely on prayer or Bible study. It's a fellowship, a group of people who enjoy doing things together."

ings had come “across the board, predominantly from energy conservation.” He was unaware of exactly how much had come from the custodial staff.

Before F.R.M. came to the College a year ago to assist the College in its re-organization of the Department of Physical Plant, there was a distinction made between the housekeeping staff in the dorms and the janitorial staff. The housekeepers, mostly women, were in charge of doing light cleaning, mainly in the bathrooms of the dorms. The janitors, predominantly men, were in charge of the heavier work.

Julie Quinn, director of college relations, said that the administration “would look stupid if we said nothing was wrong.” He was unaware of exactly how much had come across the board, predominantly from energy conservation. "It has been a major policy, short of resignation."

The result of this new policy, according to the custodians, is that women, generally older women, are now expected to haul trash and strip floors, jobs they were not hired to perform. The workers have no contract, and are not represented by a union, and therefore have no alternative to accepting the policy, short of resignation.

The major addition was the building of a stage for coffeehouses and other performances. Tevskov said he couldn’t give an estimate of the costs involved.

"This is a good example of a student project carried to the fullest,” commented Joseph Toffler, dean of Student Life. Nason agreed on its success and said, “Everyone involved views the Cro Bar as a triumph, and we’re very happy it was done so quickly.

The following trustees were approved to serve on the committee, they include: Ellen Holmeimer-Bettman, ’66, Frances J. Bovich, ’73, Jean M. Handley, ’48, Brita Schein McNemar, ’67, Richard F. Schneller and Bloom. In addition to these trustees, Janet Gerz, professor of English, David Simley, professor of art, Bridget Baird, associate professor of mathematics, and Ed Brookh, professor of history were approved as the four faculty members to serve on the committee. Thorn Pzena, ’88, and Sheila Gallagher, ’84, were approved first by SGA and then by the Trustees to serve as the two student representatives on the search committee.

The Committee meets for the first time at an entire group on October fourth, and will be pressed to complete the task of finding a new president by February. The hope, according to Bloom, is that an announcement can be made following the regular February trustee meeting, removing the necessity of having an emergency meeting later in 1988 or announcing it as late as May. It is also to allow the new president some time to get acclimated with the College.

Bloom said, "The SGA Advisory Committee presented the presidential search committee the Statement on the Presidential Search," to the trustees in hopes of it being a part of the search committee's criteria.

Advantages of Nuclear Storage

The process of preparing for the operation of a nuclear storage facility involves a number of extensive, time-consuming tasks. These tasks include, but are not limited to:

1. Site selection and preparation
2. Design and construction of the storage facility
3. Acquisition of necessary permits and licenses
4. Preparing and processing the waste material
5. Ensuring compliance with federal and state regulations
6. Training of personnel

It is important to note that these tasks cannot be completed overnight. The process of preparing for and operating a nuclear storage facility is a long and complex one. Therefore, it is crucial to begin the planning process early and to ensure that all necessary steps are taken to ensure a safe and secure operation of the facility.

Since the chemical storage facility in New London is aging, a new facility will be built in October. To store the chemicals, the school must be licensed by the Connecticut EPA and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which then conduct inspections of the storage facilities. In the most recent inspection, no violations were evident. Therefore, it is crucial to ensure that the new facility is properly licensed and inspected to ensure a safe and secure storage operation.

"Hot House" Destined for Success

by Austin Wrubd

Associate A&E Editor

During a November 1989 concert, the group The Cult, which is a band that plays a genre of music called rock and roll, was well-received by the audience. The concert was held in a venue known as the "Hot House," which is located in the city of New Haven.

The Cult is known for its distinctive sound, which includes heavy metal-like beats, driving guitars, and screaming leads. The band's lead singer, Ian Astbury, is known for his powerful vocals, which he uses to express a wide range of emotions.

During the concert, the band performed several of their most popular songs, including "Son of a Digger," "Wild," and "Lullabies to the Soporific." These songs are known for their catchy melodies and powerful vocals.

The Cult's success can be attributed to its ability to connect with its audience on a deep level. The band's music is characterized by its raw energy and emotional intensity, which resonates with many listeners.

In conclusion, The Cult is a band that is destined for success. Their music is both powerful and emotionally charged, and they have the ability to connect with their audience on a deep level. With continued hard work and dedication, The Cult is sure to continue its rise to fame.
Take Your Appetite to New London

by Brian Walker
The College Voice

When it comes to good Italian food in the area, you might think of Boston, New York, or even New Haven (home of Pepe's and, of course, Frank Pepe), but it ain’t, but New London is home to two fine Italian restaurants. One of them is the Bank Street Cafe, and we ventured to Hughie’s. Hughie’s is a tiny place, "on the other side of town," thriving on atmosphere. In fact when you first see it you will be very tempted to drive by. Don’t!

The food is excellent, and there’s lots of it, which is good, being that I am more of a "connoisseur" than a connoisseur. Seconds after you sit down you will be greeted with a basket of garlic bread, which will be finished by the time the waiter returns. Garlic, as you will find out, is definitely the theme for the evening. It’s right there on the bottom of the menu, "All our food is seasoned with garlic unless otherwise specified." I didn’t notice any other specifications.

The salad is a must at Hughie’s. Hughie’s Love Salad, from a secret recipe, is a huge salad, stuffed with tomatoes, cheese, and salami with a zesty, well-seasoned Italian dressing. Hughie’s also provides a chunk of chicken, on top of pasta, in a tomato wine sauce, with a zesty red sauce. Another good choice is the Shrimp Scampi, the house specialty. However, it is accompanied by the frightening letters P.A.T.M. (price according to market), so beware. In general, of course they have the standards such as spaghetti and baseball sized meatballs, lasagna, ravioli, etc., all of which taste homemade. If your mom happens to be a great cook.

If you like good food, at reasonable prices, in a friendly atmosphere, then Hughie’s is the place for you.

Another popular New London eatery is The Gondolier. The Gondolier is a fancier restaurant than Hughie’s, also more expensive, with but a much wider variety on the menu (e.g. nine different veal dishes). As can be expected with such a wide choice, some things are done very well, some so-so.

There are many fine appetizers to choose from. The Gondolier. Two outstanding selections would be the Clams Casino and Fried Calamari with a hot sauce, probably the best I’ve ever tasted. It’s much better if you forget your eating fried squid. If you don’t like appetizers you have a good variety of main dishes to choose from, the best being the Caesar’s Salad (for 2). Remember that salad comes with the meal, not as a separate order, or fried eggplant.

Hughie’s is impossible to try, all 88 entries on the menu, but do I have a good sampling of what to expect. No top ten list to do. A house dish such as Chicken Parmigiana is well prepared and a good bet at $10.95. By contrast, the Chicken Cacciatore is very forgettable and overpriced at $12.50 (no comparison to Hughie’s). Another very ordinary dish is the Shrimp Fra Diavolo, which was very disappointing considering it’s one of my favorite dishes. There are many good whole dish salads, best being Linguine with Clam Sauce. Instead of having the large chunks mixed in the sauce, they have whole clams sitting on top...good idea. Most of the veal dishes are good too, especially the veal sautéed with artichokes and asparagus in a wine sauce made with St. Julia. Lanzino is one of the "Gondolier House Favorites.

There is a good meal to be had at The Gondolier, albeit an expensive one. However, The Gondolier hands out a 2 for 1 coupon with each meal which makes the dinner very affordable. My advice is to have your parents take you there. "Weekend’s Your feet, you hit the ball, then you use the coupons. Otherwise, go with an empty stomach, but a full wallet.

Last, but certainly not least, is Pisaio’s, which is the next door to that big Conn. College hangout, the Bank Street Cafe (it’s a joke). There are so many things I can rave about on this menu, I barely know where to start. The shellfish is fresh and delicious (just ask them...they’ll tell you). Hughie’s doesn’t have a shrimp cocktail or the Baked Scallops. Other favorites of mine were the Chicken Cacciatore (stuffed with prosciutto and mozzarella), Veal Parmigiana ($19.50) and Tuscan Marinarra. Start with the Stuffed Artichokes or Fried Eggplant, the best of the appetizers. If you’re feeling really adventur- eous, there’s the Zuppa Pesce appetizer, clams, scallops, squid, crab legs, muscles, and whelkfish in tomato sauce for $20.95. Pisaio’s combines the best qualities of The Gondolier and Hughie’s, having the wide variety of the Gondolier and the intimacy of Hughie’s. This is the added bonus of the Dieter’s Delight menu for you "chub- bers." There’s also the lunch menu, with dinner size portions for McDonald’s like prices.

Synodi Adds Personal Touch to Radio

by Isaiah Thompson
The College Voice

"You have to approach it on a personal level, you have to do it as yourself," said Christine Synodi, '88, in regard to her experience as a WSNH disc jockey.

"The great thing about CN1 is that it isn’t a regular radio station. There are no commercials, there isn’t so many things to worry about. Synodi takes advantage of these differences to deliver a very personal radio show. Synodi says that she likes to explain why she is playing a song. Sometimes I’ll say, ‘It’s a grey, rainy day and I’m feeling blah, so I’m going to play this song.’ Synodi doesn’t plan in advance what she is going to play. It’s really depends on what kind of mood I’m in.’

Synodi also says that she doesn’t like hard core or punk. “No screaming, more mellow stuff,” said Synodi. Sometimes Synodi will throw in a little Reggae, old Motown, or classic David Bowie if the mood strikes.

Synodi’s diverse taste in music is reflected in her choice of activities. A Government ma- jor, she is the Housefellow of Larrus, as well as a lifeguard at the college’s pool. “There is an artistic side to me, and I can also be very practical. This semester I am taking two art classes and two government classes.” Synodi says that she is willing to try anything. “You should take the chance and see how it goes.”

I’m getting used to it.”

Intramural Update

While intramural flag football was entering its third week of the season, six-a-side soccer was just getting underway last week. Some football highlights of the week included the hard-fought game between the Barking Tree Spiders and Marshall, in which senior James Donahower received a butt to the chin requiring four stitches. Marshall lost the game 2-1.

"We're going to rip the legs off the spiders next time," Donahower said.

Capitalizing on the Larry's fortunes was the game plan for a Blackstone victory.

"I was very pleased with Kristen's time," Bishop said, pointing to the fact that this was Kissell's first cross country race ever.

"I ran a few road races over the summer, but I never ran a cross country race before," Kissell said. "I felt good during the race.

CONN's next finishers were senior captain Jean Whalen (21:41) in 10th place overall, sophomore Betty Long (21:50) in 12th, and junior Sarah Young (22:47) in 20th place.

"It was also her first cross country race," Bishop noted. "The wet and windy weather made the course more difficult than it would normally be.

"The course was a little slow," Bishop said. "It was very muddy due to the rain over the week. Also, new wood chips were just put down that also slowed the course."

The poor condition of the course did not affect sophomore Melissa Marquis, who recorded a personal best on the course of 23:54. This time was good enough for the first place finish on the team, and 77th place overall.

CONN will compete in the Rhode Island College Invitational this Saturday.

Tough Loss to Tufts in Opener

by Beth McKiernan

The College Voice

Despite arriving just minutes before game time and being outshot 21-16, the Tufts Jumbos smashed the season opener for the Connecticut College Women’s Soccer Team last Wednesday. By the score of 2-1, CONN dominated first half play, keeping the ball in their offensive half much of the time. “We played really well in the first half,” forward Jennifer Fulcher ('89) said. “It was inevitable that we would put the ball in the net.”

However, the only goal scored in the first half was one by Tufts. “One of our defenders inadvertently hit the ball into the goal,” Coach Ken Kline said. “It was one they didn’t deserve.”

The second half brought a much closer game. “It was back and forth,” Kline said. “Tufts got out of their defensive game.”

Suffers First Setback of Season

The Connecticut College Women’s Tennis Team lost its first setback of the season against a strong Trinity squad last Sunday. Despite losing 6-3, CONN’s top players turned in strong performances by goalie Eva Cahalan ('88); defender Carberry; midfielder Christina Burgess ('88), Alicia Ching ('88), Linda Mad- dorn ('89); and forward Mars Mitchell ('91). “Our new system (the extra, mid-fielder) worked great,” Kline said. “It did what we wanted it to do—apply pressure. Tufts uses this same system, so they were more comfortable with it than other teams will be.”

Coming into this game, Tufts was ranked eighth in New England, and as the season progresses, they may emerge as one of the top teams, according to Kline. “There are a lot of good teams in New England,” Kline said. “We have a tough schedule, but whenever we play will not have an easy time with us.”

The Camels also had a total of 12 corner kicks, none of which were converted to goals. Kline was pleased with his team’s play, which was highlighted by strong performances by goalie Eva Cahalan ('88); defender Carberry; midfielder Christina Burgess ('88), Alicia Ching ('88), Linda Maddorn ('89); and forward Mars Mitchell ('91). “Our new system (the extra, mid-fielder) worked great,” Kline said. “It did what we wanted it to do—apply pressure. FluDDy Field Hockey Wins 2

by Kieran N. Xanthos

The Connecticut College Women’s Field Hockey Team began their season in impressive fashion last week posting two shutout victories against Wesleyan and Mt. Holyoke. "It's great to start the season off so strongly," Pennell said. "We're 2-0 so far, and will definitely improve," Parmenter said.

The final score versus Wesleyan was 1-0, with senior co-captain Michele Laine scoring for CONN.

"We played well, but missed too many scoring opportunities," Parmenter said. "Missed shots" was also the phrase of the day in the 2-0 victory over Mt. Holyoke. The Camels had a record-breaking 57 shots on goal.

Parmenter is proud of the team’s accomplishment, but wishes more goals were scored. “Everyone was taking the risk and getting the shot off, even the backs are shooting,” Parmenter said. “We’re now working on accuracy.”

In this game, freshman center forward Jenny Garbutt tallied two goals for both teams, with Regina Duffy ('88) assisting on one.

Parmenter praised freshman goalie Innie Schumacher for her two shutout performances, and sophomore Jen Thatcher’s all-around play.

"She (Thatcher) is a very important part of the team,” Parmenter said. “Her blocks and outstanding and controlled the middle of the field.”

Thatcher praised the play of the whole team. “Against Mt. Holyoke, we worked very well as a unit,” Thatcher said. “We were very consistent and we outplayed them.”

CONN’s next game is away against Tufts on Thursday, and then at Wesleyan and Mt. Holyoke on Friday. “On this surface, the ball moves much faster than on grass,” Parmenter said. “We’re working on speed.”

CONNECTICUT COLLEGE

Sailing

by Jonathan Pudney

The College Voice

The Connecticut College Sail- ing Team has been demonstrating the depth of its talent and dedication to success in the early weeks of this season. Coach Tom Merola is pleased with the team’s accomplishments so far. “I know this is a good team with a great national standing,” Merola said. “I want everyone on the team to reach their full potential.”

CONN’s varsity team placed fourth at the Nissun Trophy held March 24th at Kings Point on September 19-20. The intersectional regatta is one of the most important events in the country. CONN finished behind college super powers Old Dominion, Kings Point, and Navy.

In “A” division, the team of Peter Johnson ('89), Rebecca Roggeman ('88), Tony Rey ('89), Alex Davis ('89), Adam Werblow ('88), and Pam Vanderkloot ('88) placed eighth.

In “B” division, Johnathon Pudney ('88) and Missy Burns ('89) won their division by 12 points.

In the single handed division, Curtis Hartmann ('89) placed a strong second.

The team was very happy with their success.

“Today was a really fun weekend,” Burns said. “Doing well made it more enjoyable. The results should help us in the top 10 nationally.”

At the Man Lub held at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the team placed second. Team captain Pam Penzell ('90) and Laura Cymbrowicz ('90) sailed to a second place finish in “A” division.

The freshmen crew of Jen Cookside and Lisa Herres, sailing in their first college race, placed fourth in the “B” division.

The second place finishes in “A” has the dedication to do even better than before,” Merola said.

Connecticut College Women's Volleyball. Missing Offensive Punch by Harlan Root The College Voice

The Connecticut College Women's Volleyball Team barely edged the Coast Guard Academy Wednesday night, following an early exit from the NESCAC Tournament last Saturday.

The tournament included teams from CONN, Hamilton, Amherst, Wesleyan, and Bowdoin; and in round robin play, CONN beat Wesleyan (15-13, 15-8), but lost to eventual champ Hamilton (15-4, 15-10). The recruiting record (1-1) was good enough to put the Camels into the playoffs, where they lost to Amherst (15-11, 15-13).

Despite CONN's two issues and one win, Coach Fran Vandermeer was pleased with her team's performance. "I feel pretty good because we lost to the eventual champion (Hamilton), and we played well," Vandermeer said. "And we came back from 60 down against Amherst before losing 15-13."

Throughout the tournament, the Camel defense was solid, but the offense was still lacking.

"Our attack needs work, but the defense was very good," Vandermeer said.

Outstanding individual performances for CONN were turned in by Lynda Szymanski ('91) and co-captain Maura Doran ('88).

"Lynda passed very well and Maura did some great setting," Vandermeer said.

Against Coast Guard, CONN's defense was as tough as ever, but the offense was still lacking.

That (the offense) is still the one big thing to work on," said Jill Greenberg ('91), who had a great game defensively against Coast Guard. "Bolder (Tufts) didn't let a ball hit the floor," Doran said.

Robin Mower ('90) stressed how the team has improved.

"We're communicating a lot better, and we played as a team, that's the main thing," Mower said.

"Our attack needs work, but really intense," Greenberg said. "She's a very good coach.

The Camels will look for more offensive punch when they face Mt. Holyoke and Williams on Thursday at Mt. Holyoke."

Familiar Faces Lead the Way by Dan Killionberg The College Voice

The Connecticut College Men's Soccer Team posted a 3-1 decision over UPS on Saturday. The Camels defeated the Grizzlies 7-5 last Wednesday.

The Connecticut College Men's Cross Country Team during last Saturday's opening meet held at Coast Guard. CONN finished third with a score of 75 points, behind the Coast Guard (32 points) and Wesleyan (59 points), two of the strongest teams in Division III. Butler is very pleased and excited about his team's performance.

"Everyone ran exactly how I wanted them to," Butler said. "They were especially strong at the end of the race, where it is important to stay tough. The top seven ran an excellent race and I look forward to seeing how well they will do in the future.

Co-captain Jeff Ramsay ('88) was the Camels' fifth runner, placing 30th overall and breaking his personal best record on CONN's record by 11 seconds. Lee Adourian ('88), also a member of CONN's crew team, and Michael Kaufer ('91) of West Germany rounded out CONN's top seven, finishing 48th and 55th respectively.

One of the highlights of the meet for Butler was the addition of three of his runners, Bulider, Hewly, and Barringo, to CONN's list of all-time top ten runners. "I think we got a good team this year," Butler said. The list is headed by Perkins, followed by John Barnett ('89), who was first to run last Saturday due to a leg injury.

With such a promising beginning to the season, it is no wonder Butler is ecstatic about the future of his team. The Camels compete at the Rhode Island College Invitational this Saturday.

It seems that teams are afraid to play the Connecticut College Women's Soccer Team. This season, of the three games that the Lady Camels were scheduled to play so far, two have been cancelled. CONN's September 19 match with Amherst was cancelled, according to CONN Coach KEN KLING. "Because our Amherst coach said that their field was underwater the day before the game."

This past Saturday's home game against Amherst was also called off, according to Kline, "because they didn't have enough players to field a team."

In both cases, Kline was informed of the cancellation the day before the scheduled match, which caused disruptions for his team in terms of training.

"Our practices are designed to build up to the games," Kline said. "The cancellation of games affects the players psychologically, and affects the play on the field. It's tough for the players to adjust to these cancellations, but they've reacted terrifically."

The Lady Camels are scheduled to face Western New England College this Wednesday, weather and available opponent permitting. LIZ IRWIN ('88) says that CONN is ready by 11 seconds.

"We've had 26 practices and only one game," Irwin said. "We need to have games to find out how we can play."

The lady kickers may face a high level of competition as they progress through their schedule, as most of the opponents will have played two or three more games than they will have. Senior co-captain CHRISTA BURGESS is confident that this will not cause any major problems.

"We're so psyched to play a game that we might be at an advantage," Burgess said.

Connecticut College Field Hockey Coach ANNE PARMENTER invites all interested students and faculty to participate in pick-up field hockey games in Dayton Arena. Games will be played Wednesday nights at 7.00.

The Connecticut College Rugby Team lost its season opener last Wednesday, losing 24-10 to rival Coast Guard by the score of 12-0. See next week'sVoice for full coverage.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK: Senior ELIZABETH McCULLOUGH is honored this week for her outstanding play on the women's tennis team.

McCallough, CONN's top-seeded singles player, brought her singles record to 3-0, by defeating Trinity's number one seed 6-4, 7-5 last Wednesday.

McCallough is also undefeated in doubles play, teaming with freshman SARAH HURST.

"Elizabeth is an excellent player with a great deal of discipline and talent," Head Coach SHERRY WEHR said. "She certainly deserves to be recognized as athlete of the week."

"Tough. Intelligent. Impressive."
