Mission House
Needs Leaders
Fore Projects

One of the most interesting and satisfying social work projects the League has sponsored is the opportunity extended to the students to help out at Mission House in New London. Mission House is a house with a mission; it has a past history, a present need for a future limited only by the use to which it is put. Activities are provided for both young men and older men, and weekly Home Nursing classes are being held in the afternoon and evening.

Mission House would like to establish a Girl Scout troop, a class for all girls, and a class for all boys. This will be done in the morning and afternoon.

Chairman of its Scholarship committee was appointed by the Commonwealth of Publicity Association to help the community in the three years that it had existed. The Community Chest committee is a body of public opinion, which was brought back to the House of Representatives on dates. These, houses are at the University of Connecticut, and are being held in the Faculty club room.

The Red Feather

An Editorial

The Community Chest drive has been described as an opportunity for enjoying the feeling of a job well done for those who answer the appeal of helping others. But the help is only indirect and the satisfaction, therefore, not very deep. Perhaps this is why Community Chest does not get the response it deserves. It is regarded too often, not as an opportunity to help in a vital manner those who are deprived, but rather as a routine activity to be done by those who have the money.

To determine our contributions solely on the latter basis would, of course, be impossible. Each of us has standing needs which must be met and these demands take a large portion of our expenditures. But there are still the Incidents and the luxuries, the things which vary from month to month in direct relation to our whims and the number of weeks we are taking it. We will not be too difficult to place Community Chest at the bottom of our list in November, to make out a check for an amount larger than our more automatic contributions of previous years, and only then to worry about the Incidents and the luxuries.

Those who make their contributions in this manner will undoubtedly gain a deep feeling of satisfaction. They will be doing something of which they are proud. But in the long run, can we live with the knowledge that our gifts are given to a necessary cause. But this is, after all, only of secondary importance. The main purpose of Community Chest is not the building up of our ego's, but the rendering of aid to those whose need is as great as we cannot possibly comprehend it.

Free Speech

Dear Editor,

In answer to the letter from a group of '49 who appear in Free Speech last week, I should like to express the opinion that on this campus any citizen is allowed freedom of belief and freedom of speech. If a few of the many Student Federalists on campus definitely do not desire to be affiliated with the U.S.S.A., that is something that all of us should understand. We believe that the only country which has the real democracy, the real collective is in America, and we will make every effort to aid all such groups as the Student Federalists. There is no legitimate basis for shunning U.S.S.A. aid, and there is every indication that a future Federalist chapter would benefit by such an association.

Dear Editor,

We are all excited and happy about the extension of Free Speech this year. What do you think of the following reply in answer to the question, "Do you lose your religion in college?"

As a result of inquiring around this week, I have received the following replies in answer to the question, "Do you lose your religion in college?"

"On the contrary, I think that religion takes on a new and broader meaning in college. We don't turn to Catholicism during exam week. Religion seems to take an attitude in our existence and becomes deeply rooted in our habits. The things I thought would be a Sure thing to me, the things most of my religious people do, I have found religion at college."—F. H. Strengbold

"Firstly, I think that if your own religion is strong you won't lose it. If, however, you've unfaithful to your religion you will find in college every opportunity to search for a new and find a more satisfying one. The more I study philosophy, the more firmly convinced I am of the good of the group. Their thesis is to emphasize the good of the group, the individual. Their thesis is to emphasize the good of the group, the individual. Their thesis is to emphasize the good of the group, the individual. Their thesis is to emphasize the good of the group, the individual.

"In conclusion, we should be more discriminative in our criticism of the active. See "Discrimination"—Page 2.

On April twentieth, 1946, there appeared in the New York PM two new person- alities. Mary Elizabeth Van Nos, an Irishman with white wings, a great beard and a mustache, and an alert, eager small boy. The boy was Barnaby and his fairy godfather, Dr. Robert Ulich.

The inspiration for the Barnaby stories came from Mr. Ulich's son, John, and the stories have been described by Mr. Ulich as an attempt to continue the habit of weekly informal discussion and debate. The Barnaby stories have been popular with the students in the theological problems. Expect to increase their equipment. The strip was an S.F. with International Affairs, education or work government. The strip was an obvious and apt expression of their favorite "barber-shop" song: "If I could have my wish, we could all have our genera..." Among the stories included: Jeanne Harold, Capable King, Mr. Barnaby Upset, Mr. Pittenger, Anne Ferguson, Corrine Martin, and the rest of the staff. Barnaby stories have been sent to all the various youth groups on campus and in the community and have been enjoyed by all.

The adventures of Margaret Reynolds '48 were a family of green rats, the amazing results of six weeks' hard work, a snake charmer, a harem girl, a postcard, a Hallowe'en party. The question with Mr. Pittenger was "Does God Have a Spiritual Goal?"

For all men, Mr. Pittenger said, there has always been something more than the obvious and immediate, something with an "other-world" quality. Even when they were speaking of world government, world health, or the war, they were speaking of a world that is affected by cosmic rays, showed that S.F. be a sub-communist and I'm afraid that any student in the Hallowe'en spirit of the Hallowe'en party. There, cider and donuts awaited the eager hunger party-goers as the finishing touch to a perfect Halloween party. BETTY CRAMER

By Anne Rossillo

To start college at 25 would be an experience for most girls but Betty Crammer, a bright and alert ex- student of the New York City College with the class of 1950, has found that it is working out all right for her.

Betty was born in Boston in 1925. She only stayed there for a few years, however. When she was 6, her family moved to the Cream family home to New York and then on to Jerome-town, Pennsylvania.

After her graduation from the Merchants High School in Philadelphia, Betty didn’t feel she was college material, as she so worked in her father’s office for a while. When the war broke out she was one of the many who wanted to do something about it. She left when she was told that she joined the Army. To all sur-prise her mother consented.

At five o’clock that evening Betty began her career in the Army. She was first sent to Roxton, Louisiana for basic training, a good deal of it, and finally exam. The camp at Roxton had been built by Japanese POWs and captured Japanese soldiers. The well-made barracks were, however, enclosed by barbed wire, of neces- sity.

For advance training in General Medicine, Betty was sent to Denton, Texas. "We were very well fed," Betty says, "the people were good and the climate made it very pleasant for us." After four weeks of training, Betty was sent to Alabama where she stayed for two years. "I regret not having been sent overseas, but you have to go where the Army sends you," she says resignedly. She dispatched mail and worked on records. One of her pleasantest jobs was dis- traction duty in the hospital for three years.

In January of 1945 Betty left the Army. She decided that now she wanted the education she had

Dutch Girl Now in Us Tells Story Of Liberation In May

Editor's note: The following story was received by representatives of the World Student Peace Federation on campus.

It is the story of "the liberation" which was the personal experience of Henriette Van Zandt, a Dutch girl in Waldheim, Holland, now in the United States traveling for the World Student Peace Federation, the last of May. At that time, just was another blank Sunday in the Gestapo house in Munich. There were so many like it before and it seemed to us six political enemies-prisoners in the same cell in the 'Chatham' of Waldhelm, that there would be others after us.

"Three or four Sundays back were had been upset with excitement, for it was then that we first began to hear the music. A distinctly use at first, it had come rapidly and it seemed to come in the one night the shells whistled right through the house and we had lain in the darkness, listening: 'They're coming, they're coming, they're coming.' But why is there to be one of these days, maybe tomorrow, the prison house, we had climbed up at the window and I had been walking of a group of Dutch prisoners who passed the time in their way to the factory. They were talking, "C'est fini, c'est fini!" - 'It's finished! Leipzig!'"

"That nag for bit of information had been on us two days without food, for the guard caught us at the window and instantly struck us with a match for our door. 'Kleen Essen', 'Kleen Essen', which meant that for two whole days we would not even get our ration of three small slices of breadstore, four rotten potatoes and a cup of turnip-soup. In addition, she had struck me across the face with her bunch of keys, which had left an open sore that would not heal again. But at the moment we didn't care any more. 'It's finished! Leipzig!' - we were so excited with the news that we danced in the little cell, pounded on the walls with our fists and went up on each other's shoulders.

"We tapped the message that was flying on our right and left and then we sat down and tried to figure out what was up!"

"Leipzig was about twenty years ago. But there was that gunfire coming from someplace. The Russians had been reported to be crossing the Oder after 14 days and the Oder was some hundred miles to the east. So we probably were escoped. Or could it be that the British and American Armies were in northern Europe? But that was hardly possible - the Germans couldn't go on fighting! Until the Western Armies were in Leipzig; they couldn't be as mad as all that. Too there were rumors about a crossing of the Rhine for the last few months and this has always proved to be false.  No, it was not possible. But it was possible. Why, oh why hadn't they swept away the path of the Gestapo, liberating the 4000 prisoners waiting so anxiously behind their bars?"

"Lack of Food"

"However, the gunfire died down, the excitement died down and even the slivers of the little town died down. The two days without food were an endless nightmare. There was three or four days before.

Since then nothing had happened, no single item of news had come along. The day had been weighed heavier than ever and this was not to be broken. Black Sunday. We had nearly forgotten the news of Leipzig and anyhow, we didn't believe it any more.

Guarded While Walking"

"At four o'clock we were taken out for our twenty minutes exercises in the courtyard. We had to walk in a circle at a distance of each other and in groups scattered around. We did not talk. Over our heads in a fresh, blue sky, gray clouds were chasing each other and in the distance, the pending catastrophe. We were waiting for the night. We were waiting for the announcement, the incomprehensible Russian words, and at long last, there was the news, the explanation of the whole situation, the pending culmination of the last German plans for a special program in Foreign Relations. The class has been discontinued for some time. The decision to establish the school was the immediate result of a gift for the purpose to the university by Mr. Jesse James. It is hoped that by the end of another year the school will be placed under permanent direction and more definite plans will be formulated.

For this session certain interim arrangements have been made. Courses have been offered and the students have been classified into groups. The department has been divided into sub-departments. In the School of Political Science, prisoners who passed the time in their way to the factory. They were talking, "C'est fini, c'est fini!" - 'It's finished! Leipzig!'"

Among their favorite are 'Butter Up Your Overcoat, Licky Loo,' 'Love, Broadway's Tame Street,' and 'Lindy,' all of which they sing in smooth, flowing, and rhythmical four-part harmony.

The fame of the Shwiffs is gradually spreading far and wide. They have been written up in the New York Sun in an Associated Press story, and this year they plan to make recordings of some of their favorite well-known songs.

Austin, Tex. (P.R.)—How the veteran adjusted himself to campus life? Eight University of Texas psychology students this week completed a survey on this question, made under the direction of Dr. Harry E. Moore, associate professor of sociology.

The Monday morning blues were quickly dispelled in Harkness when Millie Johnson '47 arrived at breakfast with her new engagement ring. After the excitement died down we were able to gather some of the details concerning the great event. Millie met her fiancé, Milton Goldman, last spring on a blind date. Milton was at that time a lieutenant in the Army Air Corps and had attended the Casey Jones Aeronautical School. Newark, N. J. Milton now owns a Carroll Cut Rate house in Middletown, Conn. Future plans: wedding in June.

Sophomore Sue Brenner's return from Yale Sunday night with her engagement ring caused a little embarrassment at Blackstone. As the other girls crowded around, showering her with questions, a noise was heard at the window. The eavesdropper turned out to be Jack Geller, Sue's fiancé. Sue met Jack when he was a freshman at Yale and the two were engaged. Now that he has ended his studies at a fourteen. Now that he has ended his studies at a fourteen.

Increased Federal Aid to Scientific Research is Urged

Washington, D. C. (IPJ)—Increased Federal aid to scientific research without incurring centralized control or discouraging private support, was urged by the Rev. P. R. Dougall, C.S.C., former president of the University of Notre Dame, testifying before the sub-committee on Intercollegiate Athletics and Foreign Commerce. Father Doughall, who is a member of the Government's Committee on Post War Sciences, said he favored the Mills Bill which would establish an independent Federal agency called the National Science Foundation. His one reason for supporting this measure, he added, was that he believed creation of such a foundation was necessary for national defense.

Research Lags

"Despite the increased interest in science," declared Father Doughall, "pure research continues to lag far behind applied research. The proportion must be corrected because, as the House of Representatives has pointed out, future progress will be most striking in those highly complex fields—electronics, aerodynamics, chemistry and physics—which are based directly upon the foundation of modern science.

"To insist that the need exists," he continued, "is to stress the obvious. A question more to the point is, how shall the need be met. Private gifts, endowments, and grants from state legislatures are inadequate. Universities, already affected by declining income and increasing costs of operations, are reluctant to take on expensive projects. Industry, reasonably enough, concentrates its efforts on projects which show an immediate return on the investment. Consecutively, pure research is left to lag far behind applied research and, in any case, is financially unable to assume the burden.

Methods Change

The Mills and Kilgore-Magna-son bills to establish a National Science Foundation may suggest a departure from the traditional relationship of American universities to the government; the changing time of necessity sometimes brings corresponding changes in methods. Even in the instance of the legislation which you are now considering, however, I declare categorically that I support the measure for one reason, and one reason only: In view of what is happening in the world, I believe that is necessary for the national defense. If it were not for this consideration I would oppose unalterably government assistance."

"A TALENTED YOUNG SONG WRITER—SONGSTRESS, RADIO AND RECORD FAVORITE"

"I must hear the Beethoven again."

"Forget the Beethoven, please."

"No, the Brahms that's worrying me."

"What music student, struggling along before a test, can forget the listening room at Holmes hall, with one victrola, and twenty girls asking to hear twenty different records at the same time?"

"That state of confusion has now been remedied, for the other day, not one, but four, thrilling machines were in the listening room. Each machine is equipped with two sets of earphones so that eight students may have their choice of records. It's all very convenient, but we can't help noticing the eerie atmosphere that results from a room filled with silent female earphones, and equally silent turntables."

"Eruption at Windham! Well, not exactly, although, for a few seconds minutes, it looked that way. Suddenly, the other night, from no apparent cause, bubbling steam began issuing from around corners and from under doors on the third floor. After much wheeling and grinding of teeth, the fourth floor freshmen confided that they were merely having fun with some dry ice."

Increased Federal Aid to Scientific Research is Urged

Washington, D. C. (IPJ)—Increased Federal aid to scientific research without incurring centralized control or discouraging private support, was urged by the Rev. P. R. Doughall, C.S.C., former president of the University of Notre Dame, testifying before the sub-committee on Intercollegiate Athletics and Foreign Commerce. Father Doughall, who is a member of the Government's Committee on Post War Sciences, said he favored the Mills Bill which would establish an independent Federal agency called the National Science Foundation. His one reason for supporting this measure, he added, was that he believed creation of such a foundation was necessary for national defense.

Research Lags

"Despite the increased interest in science," declared Father Doughall, "pure research continues to lag far behind applied research. The proportion must be corrected because, as the House of Representatives has pointed out, future progress will be most striking in those highly complex fields—electronics, aerodynamics, chemistry and physics—which are based directly upon the foundation of modern science.

"To insist that the need exists," he continued, "is to stress the obvious. A question more to the point is, how shall the need be met. Private gifts, endowments, and grants from state legislatures are inadequate. Universities, already affected by declining income and increasing costs of operations, are reluctant to take on expensive projects. Industry, reasonably enough, concentrates its efforts on projects which show an immediate return on the investment. Consecutively, pure research is left to lag far behind applied research and, in any case, is financially unable to assume the burden.

Methods Change

The Mills and Kilgore-Magna-son bills to establish a National Science Foundation may suggest a departure from the traditional relationship of American universities to the government; the changing time of necessity sometimes brings corresponding changes in methods. Even in the instance of the legislation which you are now considering, however, I declare categorically that I support the measure for one reason, and one reason only: In view of what is happening in the world, I believe that is necessary for the national defense. If it were not for this consideration I would oppose unalterably government assistance."
