Budget wins Assembly approval, 19-10

Passes by majority at first vote

by Carl Lewis
The College Voice

After a week's delay and five hours of questions and debate, the first budget proposal was approved by the SGA Assembly Thursday in a vote of 19-10.

The Assembly, 20-7, postponed last week's budget consideration after the Finance Committee realized that it had failed to post the printed minutes of the budget hearings for a full week, as mandated in the "C"-Book.

The bulk of Thursday's debate centered on the allocations of the Student Activities Council, Koiné, WCNI, The College Voice Publishing Group and the creation of a large band event fund.

SAC had requested $16,000 for cultural events, and received a $10,000 allocation. SAC's responsibility to coordinate campus social events includes the annual presentation of speakers and cultural events.

This year, SAC had hoped to expand its cultural events, and with $6,000 less than requested, the organization maintained this will be impossible. "We put in our budget for over $10,000, and we are being cut where we want to expand," said Robin Swimmer, '93, SAC chair.

Colleen O'Hagan, '94, SAC cultural events coordinator, said "SAC specifically asked for more money over last year in order to bring better and more speakers to campus."

Jackie Soteropoulos, '92, SGA vice president, said other organizations bring speakers to campus and believes they have been allocated sufficient resources to maintain a high level of cultural awareness. "We have a substantial number of clubs that bring in speakers," she said.

The Finance Committee also applied its standard forbidding the purchase of gifts for club members with student government funds to SAC's request.

Discussion on Koiné's allotment involved the amount of control the Finance Committee should assert for organizations which have typically gone into debt.

This year, the Finance Committee has recommended that seniors pay $13.75 for their personal photos in the yearbook. "They're paying exactly what it costs to have their photo

Police confront rugby players at keg party

by Michelle Moon
The College Voice

Waterford police confronted several members of the rugby club earlier this month as they held a keg party with members of the opposing team in Leary Field, a Waterford public park.

The police arrived after local residents reported noise pollution coming from the park at about 6:30 on Saturday, October 5.

Sgt. Joseph San Juan of the Waterford Police Department said the police officers approached the students and found "cups and cans strewn about" the site. They also discovered a half keg of beer in the trunk of a student's car.

"It was the rugby team. They were apparently celebrating a victory," San Juan said.

"We quelled the noise problem with no trouble," San Juan said. "No one claimed ownership of the keg, so we took it."

The sergeant added that many of the students were under 21 years of age. He said that Connecticut College was not informed of the encounter.

The rugby team was penalized by the administration three years ago for an unrelated incident during the spring 1989 semester.

Paul Whynott, '92, president of the rugby club, said that the recent keg party was not an organized club function. "It was individual members of the team, not the team itself," Whynott said. "Drinking is not the point of the club. The point is the sport."

Whynott and Jon Fahey, '92, co-captain of the rugby team, have decided to approach the administration themselves to tell them of the incident.

"I thought that with all the rumors going around that it was the team, just for their [the administration's] benefit, we should talk to them. They appreciated us bringing it to them," Whynott said.

Whynott and Fahey met with Mark Hoffman, coordinator of student activities, last week to discuss the incident.

"It did help immensely that they came and spoke with me, and told me that it wasn't an organized team event, just some members of the team," Hoffman said.

Students decry limited campus counseling services for suicide

by Sarah Huntley
Editor in Chief

A suicide attempt by a Connecticut College student two weeks ago has raised concerns among some community members about the adequacy of campus counseling services and suicide prevention strategies.

According to witnesses, a freshman threatened to jump from a dormitory balcony in K.B. on Friday, October 4. After friends convinced the student to come away from the balcony, the student broke down and was taken to the infirmary by Campus Safety officers.

The student had a past history of suicidal behavior and had exhibited self-threatening behavior throughout the semester, said dormitory residents, Nathalie Zimmerman, '95, and India Hopper, '95.

Recognizing these signs, Zimmerman contacted her housefellow and the administration, asking for assistance before the attempt. "I voiced the severity of the situation [to administrators] ... I really cried out for [the student]. ... and they just didn't take it well," she said.

The student met with Louise Brown, dean of freshmen, and Counseling Services staff, but was referred to an off-campus therapist and received little intervention assistance until her suicide attempt, said Zimmerman and Hopper.

VIEWPOINT

Every cloud . . .

Even the darkest of clouds have their silver linings. The recent suicide attempt by a Connecticut College student is no exception.

Rarely does a college get such a powerful impetus to look for beneficial change than it did two weeks ago. A student was close to jumping off the K.B. balcony. This student was fortunate enough to have friends who had "cried out" and sought help. Unfortunately, the help was not enough to prevent an attempt.

Connecticut College's counseling services are rated fair in relation to peer institutions'. However, they are still clearly insufficient. When a student seeks counseling, it must be available. If the college does not have the resources to provide adequate help on campus, referrals off-campus are not practical. Problems of transportation and finances can complicate an already difficult decision to seek help.

Clearly, adding more full time counselors would be an extremely expensive option. If that solution is impossible, the college can find other routes to ameliorate counseling deficiencies.

Friends of the student who attempted suicide have called for a freshman orientation seminar on recognition and prevention strategies. A campus hotline, or the posting of a local hotline in dorm rooms would also help.

The administration is not insensitive to the drawbacks of our counseling system. After the 1989-1990 report on health services, the college hired an additional full time counselor. But the system is still not functioning as it should . . . and must.

Completing another full-length review is probably not necessary. But committing energy and funds to developing a better system must be, and we trust will be, forthcoming.

Laura Hesslein, director of Counseling Services, recognizes there are problems in the system. We do not need to convince the administration that there are holes to be filled. However, it would be a shame not to find the silver lining in this cloud. It would be unconscionable not to take this opportunity to institute positive change.

Perfection? Not.

The letter appearing at the right is the only Letter to the Editor that The College Voice received this week.

Either we're doing our job perfectly, nothing we've published is of any real interest, or Fall Break took people's minds off the issues. Hopefully, it was the last. Letters to The College Voice are due on Thursday at 3:00 p.m. in the Voice office or in Box 5351.

SOAR apologizes

Letter to the Voice:

S.O.A.R. apologizes to the college community for any inconvenience caused by the postponement of Jane Elliott's lecture, originally scheduled for Sunday night. Ms. Elliott will be rescheduled to speak in the near future and we will notify the college community as soon as a date has been set.

Her lecture was postponed due to illness.

Sincerely,
Neil Maniar, '94
President of S.O.A.R.

Notes from the couch

So there I am, nursing a sore right thumb and keeping the remote control awkwardly poised in my left hand. My body has become a vegetable, more a zucchini than a potato. The couch has molded itself around me. And as if Fall Break weren't great enough already, some of the best drama (and comedy) around was on TV, live. And I'm thinking . . .

- What does it say about Americans when only 15 people (five retirees in Florida, four prison inmates on death row, three of the current Supreme Court Justices, two New Jersey toll booth attendants and one on-duty campus safety officer) watched the early part (the real part) of the hearings, but 75 percent of the country watched Wyoming's Alan Simpson stumble over (figuratively) "Long Dong Silver?"

- Orrin Hatch has got to be the front-runner for a "Best Reading of a Pornographic Text by a Devout Mormon" Emmy award.

- Was that Perrier or Absolut on the rocks in Ted Kennedy's glass?

- Howell Heflin and Strom Thurmond should have a talk show, similar in structure to ABC's David Brinkley Report and similar in substance to Saturday Night Live's Deep Thoughts.

- Will you ever look at a can of Coca-Cola quite the same way?

- If the networks had broadcast the first week of hearings, the public opinion ratings of the Senate would be far higher and Clarence Thomas would be at least slightly lower, but deprived soap opera addicts would have overwhelmed the nation's hospitals suffering from heroin-like withdrawal symptoms.

- Will the infirmary diagnose my Remote Control Thumb as a) a bloody nose, b) mononucleosis, or c) a sprained ankle?

- Las Vegas bookies say the odds are running about 197,000 to 1 against the next Bush Supreme Court nominee being a man, and that the woman he selects will be "indisputably" the best person for the job.

- Rolands would do well to star Senator Joseph Biden in its next set of commercials.

- Finally, anyone who is worried Clarence Thomas will never get over these hearings should look for the inevitable seven-figure book and mini-series contract which should help alleviate the pain.

Help make a difference

Connecticut College has always taken pride in the impact students have in all aspects of college policy — making and enforcement. All branches of student government, especially the Assembly, have had tremendous influence in implementing and changing college policies. These changes can occur in the realms of academics, athletics, and socializing.

Whether or not students actually choose to participate in student government is their own choice. Running for house senator or governor should not be seen as the only outlets for participation. There exist over 25 committees on campus which examine and attack specific issues. These committees range from Alcohol Policy, the 3:2 Committee, Educational Planning Committee (focusing this year on general education requirements), all the way to the Bookshop Committee.

These bodies obviously range in the impact

New London council race needs your vote

On Wednesday, October 23, at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge, the College Democrats will hold its first function of the year — a "Meet the Candidates" night with the Democratic candidates for city council of New London. This forum provides a perfect opportunity for members of the college community to learn about local issues and politics. It is also one of the first opportunities we have as students to demonstrate to local politicians that we care about the community around us.

It is important for students on campus to get involved in local politics for a variety of reasons. First of all, the average American family moves approximately every four years — about the same amount of time that students are on campus. We are legal residents of the town, our patronage is vital to several local businesses, and the safety of our environment is affected by the local crime rate. It is important to show that we also care about the community as a whole.

Recently one of the candidates for city council proposed a "bed tax" on the community which was aimed at the college. The tax would have resulted in half a million dollars of new taxes for the college to pay. Where would the money have come from to pay for it. The answer is a rise in your tuition. Fortunately an agreement was reached to avert the situation, but this serves to illustrate how local government affects us here at the college.

Twenty years ago a revolution took place in New London politics. A whole new slate of people was elected to office and the key to their success was the participation of over five hundred Connecticut College students in the election. Just two years ago a Democrat won the Middletown, Connecticut mayoral race by a slim victory, because strong support from Wesleyan students made the difference. This year the Republicans are out to get their share of the vote. In a community where only a few thousand votes are cast we have tremendous political power. As students we are a part of the local community and can make a difference.

Even if you don't vote here it is important to be informed. To find out how, come listen to and speak with the candidates on Wednesday evening in the faculty lounge.

Misplaced distrust in Assembly

I would like to express my concern over the SGA Assembly meeting last Thursday, October 10, 1991. First, I want to state that the incident described in this letter stems from my own perception of what took place. As a student at large attending the meeting, I was able to witness one of the senator's request for the SGA Executive Board to leave the room. This request was made after the Assembly meeting was formally adjourned.

The senator's request was obviously an unusual one, since most everyone in the room looked puzzled. However, with little questioning, the SGA Executive Board left the room.

The senator then proceeded to voice his concern regarding the ability of the SGA Executive Board to discuss issues that were to be brought out onto the Assembly floor before the Assembly meeting. He was concerned about what he thought was the apparent bonding of the Executive Board over certain issues. He thought that this bonding tended to sway the decisions of the rest of the Assembly members in deciding to vote a certain way. Thus, he proposed to form committees within the senators and class presidents to discuss certain issues and come up with a consensus similar to that of the Executive Board. This would insure that senators and class presidents would have time to research information needed to vote on certain issues.

As a student at large, I am concerned about this incident for one main reason: after witnessing the action of the senator I felt that there was no trust in him towards the Executive Board of SGA. I agree that his concern is valid. The Executive Board of SGA should not have the ability to sway senators in deciding to vote with them. The senators should be able to discuss issues before the Assembly meeting so that they will have a better grasp on what they are voting.

Yet, the fact that the senator was not able to voice his concern in front of the Executive Board and his suggestion to formalize these committees suggested to me that he did not trust the Executive Board members. The Executive Board members of SGA are present at the Assembly meetings because they are resources for the senators and class presidents to use. They are not there to persuade others to vote their way but to provide information on topics that they, compared to others, are most knowledgeable about.

If this senator cannot trust the Executive Board to give information about certain issues then, how can I trust the Student Government Association to be able to voice my concerns if within themselves they don't trust each other?

I did not stay all through the private meeting with the senators and class presidents. I heard afterwards that they are just planning to get together in groups and discuss issues informally. But, to me, it doesn't matter whether or not the secret committees would be formalized, what matters is the distrust that I saw in one of the senators — a distrust that has the capacity to grow larger.

Editor's Note: The Assembly member who made the request was Matt Coen, '92, house senator of Windham.

When Jennifer Arenson, '92, was picked up by limousine last week at the Ritz Carlton in Washington, D.C., the driver told her, "You'll be treated like a queen today, so just let me treat you that way." Arenson was transported to the Today Show set for what she referred to as "the biggest honor and greatest recognition that I will probably ever receive for what I did."

A few weeks ago, the Today Show contacted Arenson about traveling to New York to take part in a piece they were putting together on contemporary feminism. Terry Schafer, producer of Today, interviewed Arenson over the phone. "I told her it was my moment in the sun and of course time for women today." She spoke of the media's role in creating unrealistic ideals for young women. "Women don't feel confident anymore. Feminism means that you have to feel confident about yourself. You have to fight against the media," she stated. She remarked with regret that she didn't consider herself a feminist until college and added, "It's not until you really have a chance in the real world, outside of college where you feel protected, that you realize that women don't have equality."

Arenson was asked to speak on contemporary feminism because of her active role in the National Women's Political Caucus, which is a bi-partisan organization which strives to move women into elected and appointed office at all levels of government. Arenson interned at the NWPC from January to August.

In helping to plan the NWPC's 20th Anniversary convention, Arenson convinced the planning committee that "the time to recruit women is when they're making decisions about their futures and careers." Arenson became the young women's forum coordinator and planned, designed, and ran events for young women during the convention. She was also influential in re-establishing the Young Women's Caucus, a division of the NWPC of which Arenson is now co-chair.

Arenson acknowledged the role that Varsha Ghosh, '92, her former roommate, and Maureen Moakley, associate professor of government, played in showing her that "feminist" is a word she should feel proud to call herself.

"Identifying ourselves as feminists should unite us, but it divides us," said Arenson. "Women are always the ones who compromise and sacrifice. Men and women [need to] come together and support each other."

In a country where only six percent of Congress are women and there are only two women senators, Arenson is giving women reason to be proud.

Poised and articulate, in answer to Katie Couric's questions, Arenson remarked, "It is a difficult

Surgeon General addresses USCGA

by Christi Sprunger
Features Editor

In an introduction that generated hearty applause from cadets at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy, Antonia Novello, the Surgeon General of the United States, remarked, "I wanted to come to the Coast Guard because it's like the Surgeon General, it's petite but powerful." Novello spoke on alcohol and youth at the Academy on October 10.

Dr. Antonia Novello is the first woman and the first person of Latino descent to serve as Surgeon General of the United States. "When you talk about Hispanics, we are a little bit more than Juan Valdez and Chiquita Banana," she noted. Novello is a native of Puerto Rico, was trained as a pediatric specialist and eventually joined the U.S. Public Health Service. She came up through the ranks to take over the Public Health Corps approximately 18 months ago.

As the Surgeon General, Novello has concentrated her efforts on the hazards of smoking, alcohol, abuse, and violence and is working for better health care for minorities, women and children. She also focuses on the health concerns of America's women and youth and AIDS education.

Novello used many statistics in her lecture on youth and alcohol. She referred to a survey that revealed that despite laws prohibiting the sale of alcohol to minors 10.6 million of the 20.7 million teens in the U.S. in grades 7-12 have had at least one drink in the past year and more than 8 million drink weekly.

Novello also said that 92 percent of high school students have tried a drink at least once. She said that juniors and seniors in high school drink 35 percent of all the wine coolers sold in the US. They drink 1.1 billion cans of beer a year.

Novello stated that college students drink 34 gallons of alcohol—more than water or juice. They spend $4.2 billion a year on alcohol. "People believe that when they go to college, they turn 21," she said. Novello noted that 33 percent of the revenue of college school papers is from alcohol advertising, alcohol is a factor in 21 percent of all college dropouts and 285,000 crimes were committed on American campuses this year, many of which were alcohol related.

Novello also spoke about the reasons for underage drinking. "It's cheap, it's available, and I can get it," she'd been told by adolescents. She also believes that attitudes on alcohol are largely shaped by the industry's aggressive marketing techniques.

Novello stressed the importance of communication and education in teaching minors about alcohol. Since 1935, the labels on beer cans have not had to display the alcohol content.

"If you know what's in your lawnmower, you should know what's in your beer," said Novello as she spoke of her desire to make labeling beer with its alcohol content mandatory.

Novello also said, "Parents have to be the best role model for kids. The first school of public health has to be the family."

She encouraged students to "Think clearly and therefore act decisively."

"Eventually," the surgeon general concluded, "alcohol is going to be recognized in this country for the menace that it is."

500 years later, Columbus sparks controversy

by Yvonne Watkins
Associate Features Editor

This coming year marks the quincentennial celebration of Columbus' "discovery" of America, and already stories of the controversy can be found in every facet of the media with newspaper stories, magazine articles and books exploring the topic in depth. What has been hailed as the precursor of democracy and a new age has come in recent years to represent cultural genocide and ecological catastrophe.

Marc Forster, professor of history at Connecticut College, believes that the journey should not be judged as good or bad. "It was more an extremely important event," he stated. He also sees a certain inevitability about the journey. He went on to explain that "[Europe] was a lot of cultures crammed into a small space... and there were a lot of things happening at that point pushing people to explore."

He also said that Europeans also went to Africa, India, China, and Japan. "They basically went everywhere looking to make money."

Forster also states that there was a "two way interaction" between the new world and the old. America was a source of wealth and also provided European society with several important changes in the mind set of Europe. Forster listed among these a tremendous curiosity about the rest of the world; and a broader outlook, caused by comparing their own society with others all over the planet. Forster concluded, "Europe was profoundly changed by contact with the rest of the world."

The effects Europe had on America, according to Dennise de la Rosa, '94, SAC representative for La Unidad, were not nearly as positive as people are led to believe. First of all, Columbus' misnomer, calling the natives "Indians," stuck, incorrectly labelling and lumping together the many different Native American cultures. His "discovery" led to "a misunderstanding of people's cultures and the continuing struggle of people of color to prove their capability in white America," said de la Rosa.

The charges of misunderstanding and exploitation appear to be validated by several statements made in Columbus' journal. He wrote "It appears to me that the people are ingenious and would make good servants; and I am of the opinion that they would very readily become Christians, as they appear to have no religion." It is apparent that, despite his fascination with the "Indians," Columbus was not overly concerned with their rights to the land he "discovered."

Robert Gay, professor of sociology, said the controversy over the merits of Columbus' exploration stems, in part, from the immensely different effects it had on North and South America. "The voyage of Columbus is celebrated in the northern hemisphere as an event that led to the founding of what was to become the richest, most productive, and arguably, most 'open' society the world has ever known. In the southern hemisphere, on the other hand, it is generally associated with underdevelopment, authoritarianism, cultural genocide, and, more recently, ecological disaster," he said.

Gay added that, instead of debating the good and evil effects of the discovery of America, "we should be striving to understand the specific social, historical, and economic circumstances that led to such radically different outcomes in the region."

The Mijoy 747 sails regularly to Fisher's Island.

How to Catch a Bluefish

by Randall Lucas
The College Voice

"If I was going to retire, I would have done it when I turned sixty," said Mary Schiller, owner of the Mijoy 747, a deep sea fishing boat that sails out of Waterford. Anyone in the mood to challenge a bluefish can go aboard to test one's skill in the waters off Fisher's Island.

Schiller relies upon her "very capable and able Captain Paul Brocket," who began working on the Mijoy as a deckhand when he was sixteen. "He is now my son-in-law and father of my grandchildren," Schiller laughed.

It is easy to go fishing on the Mijoy, she said, just show up at the dock wearing old clothes and buy a ticket. The boat, with a capacity of one hundred people, makes trips until December. They used to be open all year, she explained, when the "old time fishermen" were alive and demanded to fish daily, even in the harshest weather.

The blues live where the tides meet the Atlantic currents. When the radar picks up fish, the captain turns off the motor and the boat drifts over the school. The rods are handed out and the fishing begins. "It's a tremendous challenge," Schiller said. It depends on skill, but "it's also your luck of the day that counts."

The mates instruct the novices. The patrons drop the baited lines down to the bottom, and then slowly reel up waiting for a fish to bite. Suddenly the line will tighten. The blue is a strong vigorous fish; "You know when you've got it on the line, and you know when you boat it," she said.

It is important to bring the fish just to just below the surface, not up above the water or it will escape, Schiller explained. "Then holler for a mate to gaffe the fish," she said. The mate pierces the fish with a large hook, pulls it on board and can even gut, clean and filet it.

On the dock Schiller showed me boxes of blues' carcasses, piles of heads, tails and bones. These remainders are given to lobstermen for use as bait. "Nothing is wasted," Schiller emphasized.

Somewhere off on the Sound, the Mijoy is heading back to port. It is momentarily quiet before the boat returns, a lull in a hardworking schedule. New people discover the Mijoy every day and become regulars Schiller said, "It's the same New England; it doesn't change much."

Playwright O'Neill still reaps mixed reviews in hometown New London

by Elizabeth Miller
Connecticut View Editor

Eugene O'Neill was not enthusiastic about New London, although New London is quite enthralled with O'Neill. The city knows a tourist trap when it sees one, and has made the most of its world-famous, Nobel and Pulitzer Prize winning former resident.

After coming off Route 95, the road immediately becomes the Eugene O'Neill Drive. It was formerly called Main Street but the city changed the name in the mid-'70s overruling the objections of the late former Mayor Tom Griffin.

Griffin said, "O'Neill never did nothing for New London . . ." Although the only thing that O'Neill did for New London was to take up a residence there, it was more than enough.

O'Neill's theatrical genius has placed him among the ranks of Chekov, Ibsen and Shaw.

Monte Cristo, the O'Neill family's summer home, located at 325 Pequot Avenue, has been preserved and is open to the public. A donation of three dollars is graciously accepted by a docent who will conduct you to the "dark parlor," O'Neill's least favorite room. There is a video about the writer which describes O'Neill's family life. It relates a sad story of drunkenness, drug addiction and despair.

The house itself is dark and oppressing. With a little imagination one can sense the presence of O'Neill's morphine-addicted mother.

New London's most recent tribute to Eugene O'Neill is a statue of him as a young boy reading. It overlooks the harbor, which is quite appropriate because it was the water and the mist and the sea captians which inspired him. He was a shipman in the merchant marines and wrote six plays about the sea.

Edmund, in O'Neill's autobiographical play, Long Day's Journey into Night sums up the author's sentiments about his birthplace. "Well, it's better than spending the summer in a New York hotel, isn't it? And this town's not so bad. I like it well enough. I suppose it's the only home we've ever had."

College asks for Olin building

Application indicates renewed push for sciences

by Lee Berendsen
The College Voice

Although Connecticut College has traditionally been strongest in the humanities, the possible addition of a new science building next spring marks a push for strengthening sciences at the college.

Connecticut College is one of sixty applicants to the Olin Foundation requesting funding for a new building. The Olin Foundation will donate two buildings worth an estimated six million dollars to the two applicants who show the most need and who present the best proposal along with a floor plan.

The college's application for the grant proposes to place the building between Hale Laboratory and the gatehouse, and includes lecture halls, computer centers, a lounge, library, research labs, and an observatory on the roof.

Steve Loomis, associate dean of faculty, explained that the addition of new, modern facilities is directed towards attracting a more diverse student body academically and quality faculty in the sciences. "We want to increase our interaction with other students and faculty. We see the Olin Science building doing that," said Loomis.

Loomis stressed that the best liberal arts colleges have balanced programs, and a science building will enhance the college's standing with peer institutions. "We feel [the science building] will attract more science majors."

Loomis pointed out that "[The new building] increases the number of classrooms available, and it adds a large 150 seat auditorium which could be used by the campus."

The building proposal is due on October 31, and in February teams will be sent by the Olin Foundation to survey the few possible candidates remaining for the award.

"They want to be sure what they're doing will make a difference," said Loomis.

If the college is awarded the building, the extra space created in Bill Hall and the Hale Laboratory will be distributed according to need. The psychology department and computer department are two eligible candidates for the space.

There are three possible outcomes from the application process. The Olin Foundation can either ask the college to apply again, deny the application, or accept it and fund the building. Connecticut College has applied twice before. Loomis acknowledged, "The chances of getting funded are slim. There have been schools who have been funded after applying for two years, but that is very rare."

Loomis made a presentation about the college's application for the Olin Foundation's building to the Assembly on Thursday.

According to a press release, "[The college] is making this application public now in order to allow the entire college community to engage in complete discussion of the proposed building."

Counselors refer cases off-campus

Referral to local agencies and private treatment firms is not uncommon at Connecticut College, said Laura Hesslein, director of Counseling Services.

Counseling Services provides once a week individual appointments for students on a short-term treatment schedule of sixteen sessions. All on campus counseling is free of charge.

Hesslein said that depending on the complexity of a situation, students may not benefit from the college's short-term treatment.

"A few months of treatment may not be very helpful [in these cases] because it is just the beginning," she said.

Responding to staffing constraints and a jammed waiting list the college reverted to the "controversial" short-term treatment model and cut appointment availability to once a week in 1985.

A report compiled by the Counseling Service Review Committee states, "[A] major area for concern in the evaluation process for referral [is] suicide. Depending on either the severity of symptoms or the Counseling Service staffing level, the service may not be able to help the student adequately."

Students referred off campus are covered by Student Health Insurance at a rate of $20 for the first ten appointments. Further costs must be paid by the student or through family health insurance packages, a option which requires that students notify their parents about their therapy.

While social service agencies offer sliding fees, there are few in this area, said Hesslein. In addition, most private clinicians are beyond walking distance and direct public transportation is not available.

The Committee's 1989-1990 report voiced problems with the lack of more inclusive campus treatment. "We feel that our referral of students to private therapists in the community may be discriminatory toward less affluent or less therapeutically aware students..."

The Committee also acknowledged, "It is a high risk we take in not having sufficient resources to respond to suicidal thoughts, gestures or attempts."

In a comparison of reference group colleges, Connecticut College's staffing levels was ranked approximately at midpoint. Since this report, one full-time staff member has been hired.

Dr. Richard Slimak, psychiatrist at the Coast Guard Academy and co-editor of College Student Suicide, said of the 30-40 percent of college-aged students who talk about suicide, 8-15 percent are serious.

With limited resources, said Slimak, an institution could benefit from raising educated awareness among the community members. At the Coast Guard Academy, all second year cadets receive 2-3 hours of training in suicide prevention and are expected to inform officials of concerns about any other cadet.

At Connecticut College, students considering suicide or exhibiting physical signs of attempted suicide are often referred to Counseling Services by students, housefellow or deans.

Robert Hampton, dean of the college, said, "It is fair to say that at least 2-3 students come to my attention each semester as displaying some of the signs."

Both Hampton and Hesslein pointed out that forced referral of students at risk for suicide is not always successful. "Forcing a student to come to Counseling Services is in some ways self-defeating," said Hesslein.

In immediate crisis situations, however, the administration has developed a protocol for emergency intervention, said Hampton.

During any attempt, the Student Life administrator on call is contacted, often by the housefellow, who receives training during leadership orientation, or Campus Safety. In addition, Hampton said he is "notified within moments of an attempt."

Stuart Angell, director of Campus Safety, said officers do not receive psychological training.

"All we do is stabilize the situation [until an administrator arrives]," he added.

Despite continuing economic pressures, Hesslein has seen improvement in Counseling Services. "As a Student Life staff we are much better in communicating and working with each other than we have been," she said. "Even in our deficiencies, I feel we have a safety net that is working well."

Counseling Services is open weekdays from 9-5. In a survey of students conducted by the Review Committee, 66 percent of the respondents said at least one of their friends has made use of services.

Warning Signs of Suicide:

- Previous attempts
- Threats and comments, such as "I wonder what would happen if I took all these pills," or "No one would miss me if I died."
- Extreme depression, especially if followed by a sudden life in spirits
- Changes in personality, behavior, eating or sleeping habits
- Preparations for death and distribution of personal possessions
- 40-50 percent of suicide attempts of college students are also precipitated by an emotional crisis situation, such as a family loss, end of a relationship or failure in career goals.

Budget steams toward dorm votes of approval

in the yearbook," Soteropoulos said.
She explained the recommendation, saying that Koiné has been fiscally irresponsible. "Traditionally, Koiné has gone thousands of dollars in debt, and this is something that we all end up paying for," she said.

The committee expects that the fee for senior photos could offset a debt without an increase in prices for students in other classes. "Seniors get more attention in the yearbook," Soteropoulos said.

Matt Coen, '92, house senator of Windham, expressed concern that not all seniors would opt to appear in the yearbook if a fee was attached.

Other members of the Assembly argued that seniors should not be the only class to pay more, and the present senior class should not be burdened by Koiné's past fiscal irresponsibility.

WCNI disputed the Finance Committee's allocation because it was based on the station's May 15 balance. This budget allots $2,814.38 and allows the organization to carry over their balance, totaling their working budget at $7,155.00.

According to Rick Wrigley, general manager, the summer's expenses brought WCNI's balance down considerably.

"The balance now is about $2,200. It is not $4,500 as you had thought when you made your allocation," said Steve Keefe, chief operator of WCNI, "We do not have enough money allocated right now in combination with our existing budget and projected fundraising to cover all of the authorized or approved expenses."

Wrigley said, "We don't have enough to pay our normal bills until our April marathon ... It was our understanding that we could not run a negative balance."

According to Soteropoulos, WCNI has the option of going into debt now, as long as the debt is made up through fundraising in the spring. She said that some organizations are allowed, or even expected, to deficit spend.

The College Voice Publishing Group raised the issue of incentives for fundraising at the Assembly meeting.

Jeffrey Berman, '93, publisher of The College Voice and Voice Magazine, said, "We have a commitment this year to raise almost $8,000 more than we intended to raise last year. Our total working budget based on that commitment and what the Finance Committee decided to give us is only a $4,000 increase."

"The Voice is being allowed to spend one out of every two additional dollars that we're fundraising," he said, "Where's the incentive to fundraise more?"

The Voice budget outlines plans to significantly increase fundraising and produce an additional issue of Voice Magazine this year.

Soteropoulos said the committee's decision to allocate funding for a seventh edition of the magazine rewards fundraising efforts.

Soteropoulos said, "Because the Voice plans to raise so much more, on paper what it looks like we gave them is less, but when you add the two together, they have a substantially larger working budget. That is their reward for fundraising."

In addition, the Finance Committee penalized the Voice for the negative $451.09 balance. The deficit was created when the organization purchased a new computer based on an incorrect positive balance given to them by Mark Hoffman.

"We did get what we assumed to be a final balance, and then we made a decision to spend the money that was left over on a computer," said Berman.

Soteropoulos responded, "All clubs are responsible for their Connecticut College bills ... They were expected to keep track of their C.C. bills and they did not. They are therefore in debt," she said, "The Voice is in no way being singled out. This is something that affects all clubs."

The issue of computers for publications also became a point of contention this week.

The budget includes a new computer and laser printer for Blats.

There are now two computers in the Publications Office, after the Assembly's vote two weeks ago to allot the repossessed Voice computer to all clubs.

Vin Candelora, '92, presidential associate, believes that the two available computers should be enough for Blats.

According to Jeanette McCulloch, '92, co-editor of Blats and house senator of Abbey, Blats does need a computer independently.

Soteropoulos added that the two computers were for use by all clubs and organizations, in addition to future publications.

The Finance Committee also established a special fund for club technology to include a monitor and laser printer in the Publications Office.

In the establishment of another special fund, the Finance Committee set aside $13,155.74 for a Large Band Event Fund. The budget creates a student committee to plan big-name concerts on campus.

The allocation and committee were both questioned by some Assembly members.

Jackie Soteropoulos, '92, vice president of SGA, defended the budget.

Sean Spicer, '93, house senator of Harkness, said, "You're cutting $13,000 out of other people's budgets. Everybody requested more than they got."

Soteropoulos said that funds were allocated to clubs first, and the $13,155.74 was left over. She said that the Large Band Event Fund is not taking money from the budgets of other clubs.

Nat Damon, '93, house senator of Park and member of the finance committee, emphasized, "We went through every club budget and gave them what we honestly felt was definitely necessary."

Spicer also questioned the Finance Committee's ability to set aside such an amount, without it being allocated to a club.

Soteropoulos said, "We're basically saving it for a special event. It is in the 'C'—Book for us to set aside money for a special event."

The creation of a student government committee within the budget was questioned. Candelora said that the budget needs simple majority to pass, but the establishment of a new SGA committee requires a 2/3 approval.

While some Assembly members disagreed with individual parts of the budget, the budget as a whole earned nine more affirmative votes than negative.

"The budget is a packet, and you have to look at it as a whole," said Soteropoulos.

Before the vote, Cristo Garcia, '92, house senator of JA, urged the Assembly not to ignore their contentions with the budget.

"If there is something that you have a problem with, I urge you to vote against the budget," Garcia said.

After the budget has been posted in the dorms for one week, mandatory dorm meetings will be held in order for the campus to ratify the budget.

Administrators clarify financial aid process and judgements

Officials justify allocations for upperclass students

by Michelle Moon
The College Voice

"Shafted." It's a word you might have heard upperclass students use when they return to campus each year and discover that their total financial aid award is a little smaller—or a lot smaller—than it was the year before.

Often, students suspect that they were awarded a generous aid package in their first year to lure them to the college. Now that they're here, they assume, the college can spend less on them.

Officials in the college's financial aid department are working to dispel those myths and educate students and parents about the college's financial aid policy.

The total amount of a student's financial aid award is determined each year by the application of a formula which takes four main criteria into account, said Elaine Solinga, director of financial aid. Those criteria are family income, family size, the value of a family's assets, and the number of children in college.

"If there's a change in any one of those determinants in any one year, the student's aid will increase or decrease accordingly," Solinga said. "Decreases in aid are a function of something that has changed in the family."

Solinga believes that problems and misconceptions arise when students compare their experiences with one another without knowing what circumstances affected their aid awards.

"We ask students to come in, so we can explain things to them," Solinga said.

Solinga said that files are maintained for all students on financial aid, and that the financial aid staff is always willing to go over students' records with them.

"We'll take a look at their files," Solinga said. "Maybe there is something we missed."

Another part of the problem, Solinga said, is that as students move through their college years, they are asked to take on more "self-help" aid. A total financial aid package is made up of "gift aid," which includes scholarships and grants, and "self-help" aid, which consists of loans and work-study jobs.

The financial aid office is working on a "Fact Sheet on Financial Aid," which will help explain to students why they are requested to work more hours and take on more loan debts.

A draft of the fact sheet states. "We have increased the 'self-help' portion of our financial aid awards so that we can afford to maintain our need-blind admission policy [admitting freshmen on their merits regardless of their need and then giving financial aid to those who need it as long as they need it.]"

The fact sheet states that the financial aid budget has been outpacing other college expenditures. "The financial aid budget [$7 million this year] has been the fastest-growing part of the college budget in recent years," it reads.

"We only have so much money in our budget," Solinga said. "We knew the recession would cause problems for families, and that we'd have to spread that aid around the total population."

Having students take on more self-help aid was seen as a way to stretch the college's thinning aid dollars.

Claire Matthews, dean of Admissions and Planning, believes there are further dimensions to the problem.

At Connecticut College, students are awarded enough aid to make up the difference between their family's ability to pay, as determined from information on the FAF, and the cost of the college.

One of the misunderstandings, Matthews said, is that students and their families often believe that if their earners' salaries have remained the same, their ability to pay is also the same. Matthews said this is not usually the case.

"There are a variety of reasons that a family's ability to pay goes up apart from income," she said. "They may have fewer kids in college, debts that have been paid, investments that have yielded a profit, added to all the vagaries of income tax," Matthews said.

"I can certainly understand how a family would feel that their ability to pay did not increase. But if you take it case by case, it's all documented in the folder," she added. "The problem comes in the family's understanding of how their ability to pay is determined on a year-by-year basis."

The problem of feeling 'shafted' does have roots in confusion and misconception. In recent years, the strongest force in the world of financial aid has been the economy itself. There are more students who need aid, and fewer aid dollars available. The disparity translates into a greater burden for students, families, and colleges alike, and there are no easy explanations.

CISLA discusses plans for the future

by Christine Alfano
The College Voice

The Program Council of the Center for International Studies and the Liberal Arts met Friday, October 18 to discuss options for increasing the program's endowment, and to listen to students relate their internship experiences.

According to Robert Proctor, director of CISLA, the center has raised over one million dollars on income endowments.

The most outstanding of these is from the Henry Luce Foundation, which provided $500,000 over a period of four years, 1988-1992.

In addition, large endowments are provided by the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, and the Dana Foundation.

Because this is the last year the center will be receiving monies from the Luce Foundation, the council is focusing on the need to make up this difference by utilizing all possible resources.

Claire Gaudiani, '66, president of the college, expressed her interest in seeing the endowment grow. She said that now is the perfect time to start bringing in large gifts due to the fact that concrete proof of the benefits of the program can be provided.

"I didn't want to approach someone with a dream, I wanted to bring them a reality," she said, explaining why she was reluctant to ask for this kind of money in the past. "The center is doing groundbreaking work in reorganizing the relationship between liberal arts and the global environment," Gaudiani said.

Chris Cory, director of College Relations, feels that the center does much to raise the profile of Connecticut College, and is interested in increasing communications between the center and the outside community. "Education has evolved to meet international needs... This is the type of achievement we can interest national media in," Cory stated.

The council members also heard student participants in the program discuss their internships.

The internships provide students with original work opportunities in a foreign environment, putting their language skills to practical use and preparing them for senior research projects.

Board grants Voice access to computer

The Publications Board voted unanimously this past week to allow The College Voice Publishing Group to put the second clubs and organizations computer in its office on weekends when other publications are not in production.

This decision will give the Voice exclusive access to the computer approximately three out of every four weekends the newspaper publishes.

Jeffrey Berman, '93, publisher of the organization, stated, "This will help, but we still lag far behind our need. Hopefully, more assistance will be forthcoming."

Two weeks in Assembly

The student activities budget was passed by the Assembly by a vote of 19-10. The budget now moves on to the dormitories for the final vote.

The Assembly vote was delayed one week because of a misinterpretation of a "C"—Book requirement. The rule stipulates the public release of the written minutes of the budget hearings to be made one week prior to the Assembly vote [See story p. 1].

Steve Loomis, associate dean of the faculty, presented the college's proposal for a new science building to the Assembly. If selected for a grant from the Olin Foundation, the new center will be constructed between Hale laboratory and the Campus Safety guardhouse [See story p. 7].

A letter to the administration, sponsored by Ratiya Ruangsawana, '93, chair of academic affairs, was approved by the Assembly 29-0.

The letter called for student representation on the committee which selects the faculty proposals to be funded by the MIMIC grants.

The constitution of the Connecticut of Rainforests Action Group, a group dedicated to increasing local understanding of the plight of the world's rainforests, was approved 24-5.

The Assembly passed the constitution of the College Democrats, 28-1. The group plans to sponsor activities that address the ideals and goals of the Democratic Party.

Adam Green, '93, a member of AACP, announced that the committee had approved including first semester freshmen grades in calculating Latin Honors. The proposal will be shown to various committees before coming before the Student Government Association.

Sarah Sutro, '94, sophomore class president, said the class will sponsor a Turkey Trot, a fun run for the college community to raise money for a scholarship to be presented to a graduating New London High School senior.

Assembly meetings are held Thursday nights at 6:45p.m. in Ernst Common Room, unless otherwise advertised. All students are welcome. Contact your house senator or class president for more information.

The 1989 rugby team was banned from play for a semester

Rugby team faces administrative decision

Hoffman would not speculate on whether the administration would take any action against the team.

Catherine WoodBrooks, dean of Student Life, said that she had "heard something about it," but she added that she had not yet met with team members.

According to John Maggiore, '91, former SGA president, the Rugby team encountered administrative action in 1989 when a group of students discovered the words to a song "that appeared to be part of some initiation rite for the new members."

The song made derogatory references to women, and "the ceremony involved a big doll or model on which sexual acts were simulated," Maggiore said.

"It wasn't the whole team," Maggiore added. "There were people on the team who were not involved in any way."

The song, along with a letter of protest, appeared on the editorial page of The College Voice on May 9, 1989. The administration responded to the offensive nature of the incident by suspending the rugby club from playing for the fall 1989 semester.

Whynott said that he had heard about the 1989 incident, but that it occurred before he became a team member.

"There's no more of that. I'm not a fan of it," he said. "I assume if something like the past incident happened again, they'd view it more seriously. But this is nothing like that."

Police arrest student for assault of campus officers

by Rebecca Flynn
Associate News Editor

Noel Sloboda, '95, was scheduled to appear in court on October 16 on charges of third degree assault of a Campus Safety officer, breach of peace, and resisting arrest.

The arrest was made by Patrolman Daniel Talbot of the New London Police Department on October 4 at 12:22 a.m. following a failed attempt by three Connecticut College Campus Safety officers to bring Sloboda into the infirmary.

According to Stuart Angell, director of Campus Safety, Campus Safety officers were called because "[Sloboda] had a medical emergency."

Said Angell, "He was totally out of control." Of the three Campus Safety officers "One was kicked in the face and one was bit," Angell explained. Angell refused to release the officers' names.

The officer who was kicked was taken to a hospital to be treated and has been released. The condition of the officer is now good.

The officer who was bitten received a tetanus shot and was treated at the infirmary. The third officer required no medical attention.

Sloboda was taken to the New London police station following the arrest and held there. His bail was set at $1,000, according to the New London arrest log.

Claire Gaudiani, '66, president of the college, said the matter of the incident beyond the arrest and subsequent charges is being handled by college deans.

Robert Hampton, dean of the college, said that "If one is involved in an assault those are all grounds for suspension." Hampton added that in an incident in which a student is in danger to himself or others, that student would generally be removed from campus for some period of time.

"The administration has a responsibility to make a decision about whether that student, or a student, should be allowed to remain," said Hampton.

Hampton would not comment on the specific case.

Sloboda's case will not be appearing before the Judiciary Board. Molly Embree, '93, chair of the J-Board, said "[The J-Board] had nothing to do with [the case]. It never came to us nor was it appropriate that it should."

Vin Candelora, '92, assistant to the J-Board chair, explained that in an incident where a student is a danger to keep on campus, that incident would be immediately taken over by the administrators on call.

Candelora said the reason for this is expedient resolution of the situation. "The way the Board runs, our cases take at least a week and a half," he said.

Sloboda has not been residing at the college since the incident. He declined comment when reached at his home in Andover, MA.

OVCS launches new program

by Heather D'Auria
The College Voice

"Semper Amati" is Latin for "always loved." Its namesake, a new program initiated last year by OVCS, is designed to help socially and emotionally maladjusted children who attend Nathan Hale School in New London.

Connecticut College students volunteer as tutors to the children one day a week for two hours. Each tutor deals with groups of kids and one particular student. This method is intended to provide the tutees with a sense of consistency and security.

According to Sal Menzo '93, co-coordinator, the program has been very successful. In fact, he received a phone call from the head of the special education department of New London.

He said, "She was impressed and wanted to coordinate the program throughout the New London school system."

Menzo is currently planning an extension of the program.

"We want to expand, but we can't until we have more mentors," he said.

Menzo added, "The teachers are just amazed with the Conn College students." Also, the Child Development and Education Departments on campus have been very helpful, added Menzo.

Last year, the program sponsored a field trip for the kids to Mystic. Menzo said this was important since most of the children are usually not allowed to go on field trips because of their behavioral problems.

Menzo said, "The field trip was so well received. The kids were so appreciative."

Menzo says that Connecticut College students are needed as tutors or simply to assist on trips such as ventures to the Arboretum.

Betsy Joseph, '93, one of the participants in the program, said, "The program is wonderful. The kids need people there who care. The program brings you back to reality. It also helps the New London school a lot. It has been a wonderful experience for me."

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Mark Salzman, author of Iron and Silk, delivered a lecture to the college community entitled "Tajiquan: A Tradition with No Future" on Saturday, October 19. Salzman's lecture came as one of many Parents' Weekend activities centered on his book, along with a panel discussion, a movie, and an all campus gala. Iron and Silk was one of the novels selected for the college's 1991 summer reading program.

Storytelling reminds adults of Wild Things and Cinderella

by Kris Anderson
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Do you remember a time in your life when your greatest worries were the monsters that lived under the bed, rather than losing a job or establishing good credit? A time when all that really mattered was your best friend, freeze tag, bedtime stories, and recess, when make believe was real, and the truth was what you believed, not what you could see. For those who had forgotten, Theater One's presentation of "Monster In The Closet," held in Conn Cave on October 19, provided a humorous, sometimes poignant, reminder.

"The idea," explained creator Debbie McMahon, '93, "is to remind older people of the things in childhood they've forgotten about." The presentation consisted of a series of short clips from popular children's literature, ranging from Shel Silverstein's Where The Sidewalk Ends to Maurice Sendak's Where The Wild Things Are, that recall the adventures and dreams most every child experiences. It also includes "how to" lessons. Children spend much of their time being taught how to be grown ups, but this presentation turns the tables and teaches adults how to be children again. These lessons, interspersed throughout the presentation, include instructions on the proper way to play, behave in class, ride in the car with your sister, and eat animal crackers—things that grown ups may have forgotten how to do.

The performers wove their way with ease and versatility through the pieces, one moment performing a hilariously irreverent rendition of Cinderella, and the next giving a serious, thoughtful commentary on the effects of television on a child's mind, adapted from Roald Dahl's Charlie and the Chocolate Factory. With "how to" lessons they drew laughs of recognition from members of the audience, who recalled fighting over the front seat of the car, whispering behind the teacher's back, and always eating the head on the animal cracker first.

"We were very happy with how the performance went," said McMahon, although neither she nor the other performers had anticipated the overwhelmingly enthusiastic response from the audience. This response has caused them to consider running the production again during the weekend of November 6, for those who did not have the opportunity to attend the last performance. And despite the fact that "Monster In The Closet" has been billed as "children's material for big people," the performers have been urged by many adults to present it to school-children as well.

In these hectic days of deadlines, bills, meetings, and relationships, it is easy to forget all the things we learned as children. But with a wonderful blend of humor and irony, "Monster In The Closet" reminds us off all the joys grown ups miss out on when they give up their childhood.

Peter Pan would be very proud.

Video dissipates the darkness of Closet Land

by Carli Schultz
The College Voice

If you can't wait until winter to feel a cold that stills your soul, rent a copy of Closet Land, an hour and a half, two-character venture into the world of harsh political oppression. Directed by Radha Bharadwaj and starring Alan Rickman and Madeleine Stowe, Closet Land places a young writer in a world of hopelessness and imprisonment, and lets her find her way out through the power of imagination. As far as movies go, this one is an extremely unsettling one.

Madeleine Stowe is the Woman, dragged out of bed in the middle of the night and imprisoned in a single room with the Man (Alan Rickman), who accuses her of writing a children's story that promotes subversion. Her denial and resistance escalates the Man's words into action in the form of both mental and physical torture. She is confused, stripped down to underwear, degenerated and humiliated by unseen voices, tied up and blindfolded by the man, who begins by banging his hands against her ears, and goes as far as pulling out her toenails.

"We must break your body to win your mind." This is the Man's policy, his never-ending, often repeated sentence to explain what is happening to the Woman. "Resistance is foolish, which is why we must break your body to win your mind." To combat this, the Woman retreats into her own thoughts. These thoughts, represented as cartoon illustrations of the characters from her books, with exception of a well-placed kick where it counts, are her only hope of hanging onto sanity. It almost turns into a waiting game, to see who can hold out the longest, and eventually, one does overcome the other. But, I can't tell you who. That would ruin the movie now, wouldn't it?

Both actors portrayed their respective characters convincingly. But even as Stowe admirably held onto sanity, I was drawn into another one of Rickman's masterful acting performances as the bad guy. For those of you who don't know him by name, he was first glimpsed on the silver screen as the well dressed, European pseudo-terrorist leader Hans Gruber in Die Hard. This role put Rickman on the map for movies. He had long been an actor for the Royal Shakespeare Company, where he originated the role of the Vicomte de Valmont in Les Liaisons Dangereuses, later played by John Malkovich in the film Dangerous Liaisons. His evil characters can also have a not-so-arched eyebrow, as anyone who has seen Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves can tell you. Rickman all but stole the show as the delightfully wicked Sheriff of Nottingham. For those who wish to see Rickman in a gentler light, he plays the perfect gentleman in The January Man, as well as a troublesome but well-meaning, ghost in Truly, Madly, Deeply.

So grab a chair and a significant other, or if you're between significant others, a snuggly stuffed animal. Closet Land may present a cold image of a harsh reality, but it will burn hot in your mind long after its visual impact has gone.

Women's crew closes 'best season yet'

The Connecticut College women's crew had a strong fall showing. In the meets this season, the Camels' times have been very competitive. A senior eight represented Conn at the Head of the Charles this weekend. With two eight's of novices and three boats of experienced rowers, the Camels should be strong. "This is definitely our best season yet," said junior Tara Rayder.

Men row well at Head of the Connecticut

If the fall season is a good judge of the upcoming spring season, Connecticut College men's crew should be hard to beat. Their showing was strong at the Head of the Textile and they were the first non-Ivy League team to finish the Head of the Connecticut this year and competed at the Head of the Charles.

Volleyball falls to Clark 3-1

After a strong outing against Clark on Thursday, the women's volleyball team crumbled in a tough 3-1 loss at the hands of Wheaton College. "We played great the first game," said Aimee Beauchamp, '93, "but then they just took over." The Camels are now 8-12 on the season with two games remaining with the Coast Guard Academy and Western Connecticut University.

Women Sailors dominate regatta

This weekend the women's sailing team won a regatta in Branford, CT hosted by Yale University. Carolyn Ulander, '92, with Liz Verney, '94, won the A division while Ann Renzy, '94, and Elizabeth Murtha, '95, finished third in the B division for a first place finish overall. The Camels won by over 30 points.

Tennis finishes at 8-3

The women's tennis team won all three matches played the week before fall break. They beat Mount Holyoke 6-3, Fairfield 5-4, and Wesleyan 6-3. In the game against Fairfield, the teams were tied 3-3 after the singles. The Camels swept the three doubles matches. The New England Championships were played October 18-20. "Last year we didn't do so well. We're hoping to do much better," said co-captain Carter Laprade, '92.

Wuyke and Correa sprint towards 1992 summer Olympics

by Dobby Gibson
Associate Sports Editor

Men's track Coach William Wuyke and runner Gustavo Correa, '94, are two athletes from Conn well on their way to qualification for the 1992 Summer Olympics in Barcelona, Spain. Their event is the 800 meters, an event which like most other Olympic events takes years of preparation. You would think the biggest problem for Wuyke and Correa might be staying healthy, balancing time between training and family, or getting their outside work done. No, this pair's biggest problem is the most elemental. They are trying to train at a school that doesn't have a track.

Wuyke is one athlete at Conn whose name has never failed to conjure up talk of Olympic competition. He's a native Venezuelan who is no stranger to the Games. In fact, he's somewhat of a national hero in Venezuela. He competed in the 800 meters in the 1980 Games in Moscow and the 1984 Games in Los Angeles, finishing 9th and 10th respectively. He also qualified for the 1988 Games in Seoul, South Korea, only to have the Venezuelan National Track Team withdraw as a result of international politics.

Strangely enough, Wuyke's roots in track actually begin with baseball, a sport which is extremely popular in his homeland, and one he played as a youngster. One day during practice, Wuyke's baseball coach held a team race which Wuyke won.

"My coach told me to go try a [track] meet," Wuyke remembers. "I won it without training."

Track became an instant love for Wuyke, and he continued running track all the way through college, where his determination and stamina were tested constantly. "I was in the library until twelve or one every night, then up at five to train. I had to burn my ass to be where I am," Wuyke says.

Wuyke's success boosted him into the top ten ranked 800 meter runners in the world. He went into the 1987 World Championships in Italy as the favorite, but didn't win. "That was not my day," Wuyke reflects.

Back problems cost Wuyke his chance in the late 1980's and may be the one thing that might stop him in '92. He currently describes his progress as "day by day."

His Olympic training regimen involves working with the men's soccer and track teams here at Conn. Wuyke says that he "knows what is hard." This constant fitness training has been invaluable to the Men's Soccer Team the past two years. "He's the best," notes Farzin Azarm, '92.

However, Wuyke's biggest success as of late has been the resurrection of the Men's Track Team, a feat which he is very proud of. "When I came here, the team was on the ground," Wuyke says. He's picked them back up and thinks that with a track to run on, and about two to three years time, he could have a solid program.

One addition to Wuyke's track program is fellow Venezuelan Gustavo Correa, '94. Correa is Conn's other Olympic track hopeful, and an athlete who will have a profound affect on the sport here at Conn. Obviously not coming to Conn for the facilities, he came to train specifically with Wuyke in the 800 meters with the Olympics as a goal.

In NESAC, he's "going to be unbelievable," Wuyke said proudly. "Maybe he's going to be the first athlete [at Conn] to go to a national championship. [But] I don't want to put pressure on him."

Correa is currently seconds off the pace that he needs to be running at to qualify for the Olympics, but is "getting better" according to Wuyke. "It may be too soon, but for the next Olympics he has a lot of chance."

DOMINO'S PIZZA SPORTS TRIVIA

Now that the Volvos, Caravans, and Beemers of Parents' Weekend have departed, let's all get down to what we're supposed to be doing here at Conn... talk sports! Since we've hit Week 8, the heart of the NFL season, see if you can answer these pigskin puzzlers.

1. Who's the NFL career leader in scoring?
2. Who holds the record for most passing yards in a game?
3. Who holds the record for most receiving yards in a game?
4. What NFL QB has thrown for the most 300 yard games?
5. Give the nickname for the following NFL defenses of old: Vikings (70s), Steelers (70s), Cowboys (70s), Rams (70s), Dolphins (early 80s), Jets (early 80s), Browns (late 80s).

The first set of answers wins a DOMINO's pizza! Send answers to Dobby Gibson or Box 3489.

Field Hockey beat Bowdoin on Saturday.

From the Intramural Department:

Football and soccer programs cruise toward league playoffs

Both the six-a-side soccer and flag football leagues are entering the home stretch with each league having either one or two games remaining in the regular season.

In the past week's soccer games, Filo Division rivals Parker Brothers (1-1-1) and Wright (0-2-2) played to a 2-2 deadlock. Junior Garth Ross continued his torrid scoring pace with two goals for Parker Brothers while Marc Hart, '94, and Alex Soule, '92, countered for Wright. Jim Shields Division heavyweight Vole Patrol (3-0) barraged The Melee (1-3) by a 9-0 count behind a two goal, three assist outing from Pete Francis, '93, and a goal and assist apiece from Jacques Touzet, '93, and Dave Howes, '93. In other action, Afterthought (1-2) picked up its first Filo Division win with a 2-1 edging of Moscow Express (0-2-1). With two goals, Ian McLaughlin provided the scoring punch for Afterthought. Lambdin Lambdin Lambdin (1-2-1) fought to a 2-2 draw with Jim Shields Division cohort Alternative Car Park (1-1-1). Taka Sano, '94, and Eli Yim, '92, scored singletons for ACP, while Geoff Goodman, '94, and Brian O'Malley, '95, countered for Lambdin.

Elsewhere, Runnin' Rastas (2-1) moved up the Shields Division standings with a tough 4-3 victory over previously unbeaten Physical Plant (2-1). Eric Coleman, '93, Robin Bashinsky, '92, Pete Gerjarusak, '92, and Len VanDykum, '94, all tallied for Runnin' Rastas and Stephen Carroll, John Driscoll, and Joe Sylvestri found the back of the net for Physical Plant. MoondeBoots (2-1) outlasted Legion of Doom (2-1) 3-1 as Luke Beatty pounded home the decisive tally for the 'Boots. Le Victoire (3-1) got back on track with a 8-0 shutout of a chagrined Melee (1-3) squad. Sophomores Jon Finnimore and Jon Alegranti each had two goals and two assists for the winners of this Shields Division tilt. Finally, the Low Lifes (4-0) remained unbeaten as they squeaked by Wright (0-2-2) by a score of 2-1. The freshman tandem of Damien DePeter and Jean-Eric Penicaud provided the offense for the winners and Soule got his team on the board. As of October 18, Low Lifes (4-0) are leading the Filo Division while Vole Patrol (3-0) seems to be the team to beat in the Jim Shields Division.

In this past week's flag football games, EM Airplanes (3-1) improved its standing in the Tolliver Division with a 35-7 trouncing of X-Clan (2-2). QB Mark Waldeck, '92, tossed four TD's, two to the fleet-footed Dave Howes, '93.

Bredeson Division force 4-Horsemen (3-1) outlasted Soul Train (2-2) by a 28-14 count. QB Luis Montalvo, '94, threw for three scores (two to Pete Everett, '94, and one to Dan Levine, '94) and also rushed for a TD. Ian Luepker, '92, accounted for both Soul Train tallies. In the battle of Bredeson Division unbeaten, Team Yank (4-0) held on against Smiling Assassins (3-1) 14-7. Matt Shea, '93, continued his success at QB with two TD passes while Jon Wales, '93, scampered for both Smiling Assassin scores. In another competitive matchup, David (3-0-1) proved to be too much for Tolliver Division challenger Moondogs (2-1), 28-14. QB Cristo Garcia's, '92, four TD passes were the difference for the winners while Eric Harnden, '92, led the Moondogs with a TD toss and TD run. The final flag football game of the week saw Legion of Doom (2-2) stomp The Men From Nantucket (0-4) 35-0. A balanced attack was the key for the Legion, seniors Jon Krawczyk, Scott Crosby, J.T. Straub, Marc Freiburger, and Sam Davenport each scored a TD. Presently, Team Yank (4-0) leads the Bredeson Division while EM Airplanes (3-0-1) and David (3-0-1) are atop the Tolliver Division.

Please call in your 3 vs. 3 Hoop teams by October 30 for the Saturday, November 2nd tournament. There is also a 4 vs. 4 Ice Hockey Tournament with an October 30 sign-up deadline and a November 3 start.

1-8 Tufts Jumbos surprise Field Hockey team 2-0

Sachs sets new save record at Trinity

by Geoff Goodman
The College Voice

Like a piece of wood floating through the rolling waves of the sea, the Connecticut College Women's Field Hockey Team fell from the crest of its wave in a tough loss to a lesser Tufts squad, but bobbed back with a win on Saturday over Bowdoin.

The Camels, whose record as of Sunday stands at 9-3, the first time a Camel team has reached the nine win plateau, were coming off an exhausting 1-0 overtime loss at the hands of Trinity when they faced Tufts, a supposedly inferior team. "It was a suprising loss," said senior co-captain Laurie Sachs.

Co-captain, Amy Norris, '92, added that the loss, "will definitely hurt our ranking, but we still hope to make the ECAC tournament."

After the disheartening loss against the Jumbos 2-0, the Camels had a few days to regroup before their next important game against Bowdoin. They knew that they still had work to do and that they could not be satisfied with their play.

The women played like a completely different squad than the one which had shown up for the Tufts game. The Camels got a controversial goal at 21:38 of the first period by Tyson, assisted by Suzanne Walker, '93, to knot the score at one at the half-way mark.

The game-winner came at 53:25 of the second half when junior Carter Wood came in on a one on one and fired a shot that hit the post only to be stuffed right back in by the relentless Wood. Tyson said that Wood has "got great speed, and is really aggressive."

However, Sachs was the hero of this game. Under a barrage of twenty-five Bowdoin shots compared to only twelve for the Camels, she recorded seventeen saves to preserve the 2-1 victory. "Laurie is an amazing goalie," said Tyson. "She's very quick to recover and will make save after save." Against Trinity last week Sachs set a new school record with 37 saves in one game.

Sachs was quick to return the compliment. "Abby is the backbone of the offense. She's a real hustler and is all over the place," she said.

Tyson was also commented on Norris' superb play.

"She's got a never-say-die attitude. If she goes one on one with someone she always comes out with the ball. She's a very smart player. We have a very smart team. When we fall apart is when we are thinking in different ways. When we click we are amazing."

The team needs to be hungry and "click" in their final two matches against Williams and a very strong Clark team to ensure their bid in to the post season tournament.

Sachs said, "As a team we are not satisfied unless we are perfect in our own minds."

Needless to say, any result other than a Camel victory is not good enough.

The Cross Country Team finished second in Saturday's meet.

Camel cross country teams polish off strong season

McGee grabs first place at final home meet

by Debra Napolitano
The College Voice

The gun has gone off for the last time this year for the cross country runners on their home course. They ended the season on a good, strong note however, for Saturday's meet was one of the best showings for both teams.

The women placed ahead of Salve Regina, Rhode Island College and Eastern Connecticut State University. They were bested only by the Coast Guard Academy. Coach Ned Bishop thought the race was progressive, because the team is catching up to the Coast Guard runners. This is the best they've done so far against them.

The highlight of the meet came in the form of freshman Katie McGee, who was in second place up until the last 1000m where she pulled ahead to capture first place by fifteen seconds.

The other members of the team also ran well. Kat Havens, '93, placed fifth with a time of 21.31 Zephyr Sherwin, '95, came in eleventh with a time of 22.25. Leah Bower, '93, took twelfth place.

Due to an illness, Jennichelle Devine, '94, ran for the first time this season and placed fifteenth. Following her, in sixteenth place was Lyn Balsamo, '94, with a time of 23.04. The last player for Conn was Kristin Gonski, '93, with a time of 23.07. For last year's number one runner, participating in this race was a last minute decision, but the team was glad to have her.

The men's cross country team also dominated their course with a first place finish and individual finishes of second through sixth place in the race itself. The team was up against Rhode Island College, Massachusetts Maritime and Eastern Connecticut State University.

The top three senior male runners had an excellent day. They all completed the race with personal bests and fantastic finishes. Mat Desjardins, '92, came in second with a personal best of 28.44; the only one exceeding his time was Kevin O'Neele from Rhode Island College. Peter Jennings, '92, also had a personal best of 30.03 which enabled him to capture third place. Following was Jeff Williams, '92, with a personal best of 30.15. Freshman Craig Morrison broke up the pack of seniors by coming in fifth. Ian Johnston, '92, was took sixth.

Next weekend, the cross country team will send the top seven runners to the NESCACs at Tufts University. The men's cross country team is hoping to finish ahead of last year's ninth place.

Thomas, Hill, and Baum's conduct under question by college community

99.99999 percent chance that Senator Strom Thurmond from South Carolina is brain dead. How dumb are the people of South Carolina? and a meaningless NHL Rangers-Capitals game last Monday night. "I apologize," Baum said in an affidavit released recently, "for nothing. I saw all the touchdowns." Baum's conduct will be under full review from a panel of campus Giants fans. Punishments range from a simple letter of censure to suspension from game viewing, being fined pizzas (which will be split among Giants fans), and/or a weekly urinalysis.

Baseball

The fans at two out of the four Championship Series parks need to be severely reprimanded. Firstly, it is widely known that the Minnesota Twins invented the Homer Hanky. There's nothing lamer than the Blue Jay fans' "Rally Rag" which appeared suddenly for Games 3, 4, and 5 of the series — apparently the result of some incredibly creative Canuk. At least the Canadians will stay out of the Series for another year. Now they can head back to the rinks where they belong. Secondly, "The Tomahawk Chop" has as about as much baseball tradition as the Braves have in Atlanta. We love those lovable losers and are happy to see that they play on natural grass, but "The Tomahawk Chop" is Florida State Football's cheer, not the Braves. As far as Pirates fans go, with apologies to Dave Bender, '93, we think they may have finally got the hang of clapping sometime during Game 2. That there were 7,000 empty seats for game 7 of the NLCS does not say much for the city. What an embarrassment to the sport of baseball. The franchise should move from that miserable city.

Monday Night Pick

Last week: (10/7/91) K.C. Chiefs

+2 and a half vs. Buff Bills. Final score: K.C. Chiefs 33, Buff. Bills 6 - We Win. Record: 3-1-2 (.750). This week: Cin. Bengals travel up to Orchard Park to take on the Buffalo Bills who are favored by 13 points. The Schmoozing boys are out of the gate in a hurry and look to stay that way with another winner this week. With both teams employing high octane, hurry-up offenses and soft defenses — look for a lot of points to be scored. Although 13 points are a lot of points to lay down, we've got to like the Bills. With or without Kelly, they have too much offense for the winless Bengals who are always threatening to wake up and erupt but never do. Provided this game doesn't serve as a wakeup call for the Bengals, the Bills will simply outgun them by more than the necessary 13 points. Take the Bills and lay the points.

Miscellaneous

Everyone keeps asking us what we think of the Thomas vs. Hill issue. We don't think there's any question about it. Thomas is leading the AFC in rushing and is averaging about a TD a game for the Bills while Houston's Drew Hill took until week seven to score his first . . . One thing that Schmoozing did clearly draw from the Senate hearings is that there is a

Nightmare on Mohegan Ave:

Trinity breaks hearts; McBride breaks his leg

by Dobby Gibson
Associate Sports Editor

The biggest nightmare for any team in organized sports would have to be the loss of their top player to injury. The second biggest nightmare would probably be having an official's call decide the outcome of an important game. Unfortunately for Conn, these two nightmares were realities for the men's soccer team last Saturday at Trinity. Instead of wearing the smiles of a team poised to enter post-season play, Conn's kickers are wearing circles under their eyes after suffering a nightmarish defeat to Trinity, losing their top player to injury, and now looking ahead to two tough and meaningful games with Assumption and Williams.

Things did not bode well for the Camels from the start when they faced off against the Bantams. Not five minutes into the game, Conn's tri-captain Jon McBride, '92, was carted off the field for the duration of the game after a challenge for the ball. McBride was given ice and diagnosed with a rather bad bruise by the Trinity trainer.

It was a "pretty innocent looking challenge," said Yuval Lion, '93. After a visit to the hospital in New London, it was determined that McBride had broken his leg, and he was placed in a cast extending above his knee. "We lost our best player," Lion said sadly, but Conn's nightmares had only begun.

At the end of the first half, Sean McAllister, '92, knocked in his team leading eighth goal of the season to equalize the score at 1-1. The second half pressed on scoreless until late in the game when Conn appeared to have taken the lead for good on a goal by Pete Spear, '94, who had taken the place of the fallen McBride. The lineman was in perfect position and his flag remained at his side. But the head referee, who was behind the play, blew his whistle disallowing the goal.

Trinity ended up netting not one, but two goals, in the second overtime period to send the Camels home 3-1 losers. Despite the nightmares the team suffered, the players mostly blamed themselves.

"Not one person had a particularly good game," Lion noted. The exception being Spear who "did a good job coming in for Macker." The Camels are now looking to regroup, finishing off their home schedule against a beatable Assumption team Tuesday at 3:30. And then they'll play the game that may mean it all: next Saturday against an undefeated Williams squad.

The circles looked darker as Lion said, "We'll have to win or tie on Saturday to make the tournament."

Shawn McAllister, '92, cruises by an opposing defender.

Supko leads Camels to soccer victory

by Jonathan Zaff
Acting Associate Sports Editor

Consistency of play has not been top priority for the women's soccer team. "We're not passing the ball. We're losing one-on-ones and we're not working well as a team," Marnie Sher, '94, said. Over the last two weeks, instead of a possible 4-0 record for their last four games, the Camels came away with a mediocre and disappointing showing of 2-2.

The first two games were successes for the Camels, as they defeated both Western New England College and Bowdoin College. On October 8, the Camels destroyed Western New England 8-0. Western New England could never get into the game thanks to the dominating play by sophomore Kate Greco who had two goals and one assist, and freshman Courtney Skulley who had two goals as well. Goaltender Anne Palmgren, '93, had to do very little as she only had to make three saves, while freshman Julie Granof replaced Palmgren late in the game and made one save.

In the Bowdoin game, October 12, the Camels made a valiant comeback to beat Bowdoin, and Kristen Supko, '92, surpassed Katie Bing's, '90, school scoring record capping her 54th point of her college career. Supko scored the first goal of the game off of a pass from Jen Ciotti, '92. Supko passed one Polar Bear defender and then blasted a shot to the lower right corner. However, Bowdoin took away any celebration that Supko had for her goal when they scored two goals late in the half to take the lead 2-1. In the second, Skulley scored off of Sher's pass to tie, and then Sarah Ciotti, '95, finished off the comeback with a goal with six minutes remaining to lead the Camels to victory.

October 15 was not a joyful day for the Camels as they had to host Williams, a team that had not been beaten in 15 games and compiled a 9-0-1 record this year. The Camels were not going to be driven into the ground by this powerful Williams team. The only shot that found its way by Palmgren was delivered by Linda Allen of Williams (67:53). Palmgren saved seven other shots.

"They were definitely better than us, at least on Tuesday," Sher said.

Wellesley did not seem to deserve the win when they beat the Camels last Sunday 2-0. Crissy Haywood played well, as usual. The usually non-impressive Wellesley team just wanted the game more than the Camels, who did not come into the game with the intensity that they did when they teamed up against Williams and Bowdoin.

"We thought that we had pressure [to make the tournament] with three losses, but now we have four," said Sher.

The women's soccer team has the opportunity to conclude the season with a 10-4 record when they play host to Clark University on Wednesday and then travel to Bates on Saturday for the season finale.

Marnie Sher, '94, knocks a shot out of the box.

Athlete of the Week

LAURIE SACHS, '92, co-captain of the Field Hockey Team secured 37 saves in Trinity game, setting a new college record.
