On Monday November 1st at 4:30 p.m., the Government Department held a panel-discussion concerning the other elections that were occurring in the House, Senate, and the state. With all the publicity about the presidential election, the students attempted to educate students about the other elections taking place. The students were able to provide some insight as to the outcome of particular elections. Moderated by Professor of Government, Dorothy James, the lecture was a three-panel discussion with Professor of Government, William Fraser, Associate Professor of Government, MaryAnn Borisello, and Dr. John Nogue, an institutional researcher.

Our country has a long history of a two party political system consisting of the Republicans and Democrats. However, Professor James began the lecture with an interesting point noting that the number of voters registered as Independents has dramatically increased in recent years. Every two years, approximately one-third of the Senate seats are contested through elections. In addition, the country, Professor Fraser began with acknowledging the fact that this large number of members are expected to win re-election this year. He discussed through eleven of the leading senators in the Senate. A few of the states that Professor Fraser discussed included Alaska, South Dakota, Florida, and Colorado.

Prior to the election on Tuesday, the Republicans controlled the Senate, but only by a margin of fifty-one to forty-nine and one independent seat held by a Senator from Vermont. After Professor Fraser finished speaking, Professor Borisello spoke about the House of Representatives. In the House there are four hundred and thirtyfive seats. The representatives have a two-year term. As a result of this term limit, Professor Borisello noted that the House is extremely partisan and members are on an intense cycle of campaigning.

Proportional Representation Can Maintain High Voter Turnout Levels

Although the Democratic and Republican parties succeeded in courting more Americans to the polls this election, it is unclear whether this will be a continuing trend. It is imperative that the new interest in politics be captured and maintained for future elections. Most political scientists blame disappointing voter turnout on political alienation, a decline in partisan affiliation, and a decrease in patronage jobs. They also view low voter turnout as a sign of waning confidence in government. However, low voter turnout results from our winner-takes-all electoral system.

Proportional representation (PR) is that parties or voting groups should win seats in elected bodies in proportion to the share of the popular vote that they received. A more accurate definition of PR is that it systems produce a higher rate of voter satisfaction, making it more likely that each party or group running receives the votes cast for a candidate belonging to the non-dominant group. This produces a greater opportunity to be elected into government. More citizens are offered to voters, who can elect their favorite candidates to office. This produces a higher rate of voter satisfaction, making it more likely for an individual to return to the polls next election.

Several studies have shown that ---

Letters to the Editor

The United States’ voter turnout routinely falls well below many other nations. In a comparison of voter participation rates of the voting age population across the 21 democracies in Western Europe and North America, the United States ranks 20th. Britain is another notable electoral system, and by most other measures, an electoral system that would assist in returning many of the ideals that contribute to lower voter turnout.

The general premise of proportional representation (PR) is that parties or voting groups should win seats in elected bodies in proportion to the share of the popular vote that they received. A more accurate definition in a PR system is that it systems produce a higher rate of voter satisfaction, making it more likely that each party or group running receives the votes cast for a candidate belonging to the non-dominant group. The American people, a truly lubanous breed, elected George Bush for a second term as president. Americans did so because they believe that the Republican party represents the best chance for their country. Bush and his team have demonstrated his considerable talents for occupying office; he's skillful at handling international relations, and he's brilliant at running a national deficit and he's an abysmal failure for conflating religious faith with policy. Yet, let's not forget his exceptional gift of managing the children below.

The President's prodigious level of incompetence beguiles a campaign question: how is it possible to support his reelection? The answer to this question is long, convoluted, and detailed, but your present state of wary opportunism prevents me from elaborating on a question of national deficit. However, he is a pure failure for conflating religious faith with policy. But let's not forget his exceptional gift of managing the children below.

1. The Haunting: The first film in a series of ten supposedly bad movies that scare movie lovers definitely freaked me out. I was terrified. It didn't scare me, it probably scared me. I was terrified. And maybe it doesn't sound that bad, but from when I was one scary bitch!

2. Insidious: This is one of John Carpenter’s classics, and every time I see it, I’m reminded of the time when Mary has been replaced by the presence of a demon spirit. Police officers in a particular urban area, trying to unravel the mystery of the disappearance of a young girl, find themselves drawn into a series of events that seem to have no explanation. The plot thickens as the investigation continues, and the audience is left on the edge of their seats, anticipating the nexthorrifying twist. The movie is a classic example of the type of horror film that keeps viewers on the edge of their seats for the entire duration.

3. Jeepers Creepers: This is a horror film that follows a group of friends on a road trip who encounter a supernatural being on their way to a remote cabin in the woods. The creature, known as the Creeper, is a humanoid figure with razor-sharp teeth and glowing red eyes. Once the friends glimpse the creature, they realize that it is following them, and they must escape the cabin before the Creeper can catch them.

4. The Conjuring: This is a true story of a family that moves into a house in Connecticut and begins to experience bizarre and supernatural occurrences. The family seeks help from a paranormal investigator, Ed Warren, who agrees to perform an exorcism on the house. However, the exorcism only makes the supernatural activity worse, and the family must band together to fight against the evil势力.

5. The Shining: This is a classic horror film that follows a family who takes over a hotel in the middle of nowhere to summer. The hotel owner, played by Jack Nicholson, is an alcoholic who is also haunted by a supernatural presence. As the family settles in, strange events begin to occur, and it becomes clear that the hotel is not what it seems.

An Almost Appealing Invitation

So Halloween was Sunday. But that doesn't stop the College Voice from bringing out my favorite holiday and keeping things up for a while. In honor of Halloween, here’s a good old-fashioned bandwagon top ten: the top ten supposedly bad movies that scare movie lovers definitely freaked me out. I was terrified. It didn't scare me, it probably scared me. If it didn't scare you, it probably scared me. I was terrified. And maybe it doesn't sound that bad, but from when I was one scary bitch!

Sophie Kinsella has done it again. She has written another book in the Shopaholic series called Nothing Unusual in Providence at Ultra.

Kinsella has captured the reader's attention with her realistic portrayal of Becky, a young woman who is constantly battling her shopping addiction. In this book, Becky finds herself in Providence, Rhode Island, where she starts a new job and falls in love with a handsome man named Ted Leo. The novel explores themes of love, friendship, and the struggle to overcome addiction.

While it may seem that the story is simply a romantic comedy, it is much more. Becky's journey to overcome her addiction is not an easy one, and it requires hard work and support from those around her. The novel is filled with humor and heartwarming moments that will keep readers engaged throughout.

Are you tired of disease and desire something completely different? Well look no further than Ultra – a techno and hip hop themed night club located on Friendship St in Providence. Only four minutes away, it’s a convenient escape from the New London bubble.

What I like about Ultra is that it has its own unique sound. You can get lost even further as you depend on what you’re hearing. But let me put it to you this way: if you’re planning on spending a night at Ultra, leave your pink polo shirt at home – the club has a Euro vibe from the way it looks to the way it feels.

One of the most unique things about Ultra is its pulsating beats associated with clubbing? Well look no further than Ultra – a techno and hip hop themed night club located on Friendship St in Providence. Only four minutes away, it’s a convenient escape from the New London bubble.

The performance will take place at 8:30 a.m. However, I would recommend leaving a little early to avoid the line. It’s a much better way to get into Ultra. If you’re planning on spending a night at Ultra, leave your pink polo shirt at home as it’s not part of the dress code. The club has a Euro vibe from the way it looks to the way it feels.

government income through tax breaks. As a social liberal, I am satisfied that George Bush has taken measures to strike civil liberties and has let the religious right take over the white house. He may be a flip-flopper, but I do not necessarily agree with everything he does. I honestly feel safer in his country with George W. Bush as our president. I think that if the terrorists could choose a President, they would choose Kerry.

Another anonymous Republican said, "I feel that John Kerry is a flip-flopper, and his record in the Senate shows this. I believe that he takes his answers to important issues depending on who is speaking to at the time."

A great number of Con voters were also supportive of John Kerry. Senior Joel Malenbranche got straight to the point by saying, "I'm voting for Kerry because I don't want my President to be a cowboy."

Other voters felt even more strongly about making sure that Bush did not become President. "I voted via absentee ballot for John Kerry. Hopefully, that doesn't work out. I feel that Bush distorts the world, but because they had been forced to attract Americans or a message which indoctrinates the whole America was fascinating. Their message was juvenile and illogical."

Bush's campaign was able to attract many voters. Matthew Dowd, the Bush-Cheney chief strategist, noted on CNNnews.com that in this election 46% of Hispanics (up from 35 in 2000), 11% of African Americans (up from 37% in 2000), 24% of Jews (up from 30% in 2000), and 47% of women (up from 45% by George Bush. I was distraught in that, while the Jewish voter did not have much in support of Bush, this time around, although it did increase by a number of percentage points. This shows how ill-informed the pro-Israel Jews of America are about who they should be voting for if they want a president with a pro-Israel support court. I think Bush does have the Evangelical Christians, I was told when I started voting that it was for the people of the Jewish faith. I now feel that it doesn't do this. APalestinian is an example of the 'population' that the Bush-Cheney chief strategist was talking about.

Students at Connecticut College have been encouraged for the past few months to vote and thus become active in democracy by doing so. Most students seemed to have responded to this message because many students at Con had something to say about the election. A particular topic Dr. Nugent touched on was the issue of certain states having term elections for committee members of the Congress. Of the congressional elections that occurred on Tuesday, Professor Broeli discussed that thirty-four of the races were considered close. Of those thirty-four elections were held by Republicans and fifteen were held by Democrats. Professor Broeli declared that some of the interesting races to look at would be Arizona, California, and Texas.

Dr. Nugent was the last panelist to speak. He focused on the state to state in government, politics, lobbyists, interest groups and referendum, and their elections. While often overlooked, Nugent argued that state legislation is important because some of the key policies it passes concern issues such as education, social services, and environmental protection. Also, it is the state legislatures that draw districts for the House representatives.

This year, the election was an informative and interesting year for students to gain information concerning the elections that occurred in the United States on Tuesday. While the "other" elections that occur in the United States may not be as well known, Dr. Nugent emphasized how important it is to be well informed about the candidates and situations surrounding the particular elections.

Rowers Turn In Strong Performance Camels Of The Week: Christa Thoeresz

Thoeresz has been a major contributor to the Camels' success throughout her four years. Thoeresz, a senior co-captain along with classmate Mary Bushnell, has had a decorated career as a Camel. Thoeresz was voted NESCAC All-Region recognition.

Field Hockey Wraps Up Tough Season

After a disappointing 0-5 start, the Conn field hockey team rallied, winning five of their final six games. The last time the Camels put together such a streak was in 1997 (5-2-7). In the final game of the season, the Camels upset Tufts by a score of 3-1. The Jumbos were then ranked #5 in the nation.

Field hockey coach Charles Halpern noted, "It was great beating them on their home field. The confidence that the girls had built up throughout the season was there for the entire 60 minutes." The win was a big morale booster for the Camels, who have struggled in recent years. The Camels are hoping to make it to the NCAA tournament this year.

While soccer has certainly been a priority for her, Thoeresz has emphasized the true nature of a natural athlete throughout her time at Conn.

Alyson Ridgway '08, who was on the bench to the star of the franchise, may mean you being traded or released. If it is an equal partnership, you can take precedence over the individual needs of a player. Basketball, like in football, is a team sport, and these decisions are made with the team in mind. Sometimes, you have to play hurt or play well, but I'll decide when it's the right time to make the next move as an athlete, regardless of the team or opponents. Being a little or a lot, is entitled to play. What's best for the team is what it used to be."

Women's Soccer Into NECASC Semis

By Peter Sterling

The Connecticut College women's soccer team started fast but faltered late. However, the Camels still have a shot at winning the NECASC tournament and a trip to the NCAA tournament. Playing against Bowdoin, the Camels were missing Molly Kawachi and Alliance Sogand. Kawachi '06 was a very hard weekend for the Camels. Kawachi scored 11 kills and three blocks. Against the Bates Camels, Kawachi '06 was a very hard weekend for the Camels. Kawachi scored 11 kills and three blocks. Against the Bates Camels, Kawachi '06 was a very hard weekend for the Camels.
