College health service switches Pap smear lab
by Lisa broccoli

For the women of Connecticut College who received Pap smears for the past semester from the College's Health Center, a slight change exists that may result in a shot in the arm.

The Health Center discovered in an article in The Wall Street Journal that Cancer Screening Services in California, the lab which the Health Center uses as final examiners of the Pap smear slides, was noted to have "tax practices" as stated in a letter sent to the female college community by Robert Hampton, the dean of the college.

Gay Stanislawski, the nurse practitioner for obstetrics and gynecology at the Health Center, said that some of the technicians at the Cancer Screening Services lab were underqualified and overworked. Stanislawski added that the Health Center decided to use Connecticut's growing focus on the endowment. Lois Carleson of the Development Office stated, "Now is the time to concentrate on the endowment." Poof mentioned also the issues of favoritism and job security as priorities for the union.

The Health Center has now switched over to the Cytology Department at Lawrence and Memorial Hospital in New London which is almost three times more expensive than the lab in California, according to Stanislawski. Yet, the examiners at Lawrence and Memorial are well-qualified and only analyze approximately 40 slides per day, said Dr. Louis Bellagio, the Medical Director of the Health Center.

According to the January 25 issue of Newsweek magazine, this amount is within the limits suggested by the American Society of Cytology which recommends that an examiner test no more than 50 slides per day.

an increase of $7,686,160. The largest increase in the endowment occurred between 1985 and 1986, a period during which there was a $5,536,619 increase.

The increase in the endowment was the result of a six-year campaign that ended on June 30, 1986. The campaign was sparked by the recognition of the lack of income from sources outside the immediate college community. President Oakes Ames' term has been partially characterized by Conn.'s growing focus on the endowment. Lois Carleson of the Development Office stated that Oakes Ames' presidency has absolutely had a positive effect on the endowment.

Carleson also claims that "there has been a focus on the endowment until the last ten years. She believes that Conn.'s fundraising campaign was a much needed effort.

Briggs Payer, '90, stated that "Conn.'s fundraising campaign was a much needed effort."

The Presidential Search Committee, formed at Connecticut College last September to find a successor for President Oakes Ames, hopes to have completed its work in time to make an announcement on the search by Conn.'s growing focus on the endowment. Lois Carleson of the Development Office stated, "Now is the time to concentrate on the endowment." Poof mentioned also the issues of favoritism and job security at the union vote.

The Presidential Search Committee, formed at Connecticut College last September, has broken this trend as the growth in minority percentage slowed down.

Union vote date is set
by Thane Poof

The College Voice

After the January 26th hearing before the National Labor Relations Board (N.L.R.B.) in Hartford, the Connecticut College Physical Plant and Dining Services union election date has been set for March 3rd, in Crozier-Williams.

The election will take place between 6:00 A.M.-1:30 P.M. and 3:30-6:00 P.M. in Conn. Cave.

According to Co-Presidents of the union organization, Bob Poof and Linda Conogno, 76 percent of the blue collar workers at the College signed the card of intent, issued last month. They then signaled their initial approval of the union.

The union organizers need 51 percent of the Physical Plant and Dining Services employees to gain official recognition from both the College and the N.L.R.B. Poof said he "feels confident" about the upcoming vote.

Julie Quinn, the College's director of public relations, said that she did not see a union as inevitable, and that the College remains opposed to one's formation. She said that the administration and the employees could better communicate with the help of a union.

Poof said that a union "could only help communication. It'll bring us all around the table together as equals." Conogno continues to say that the number one concern of the union organization is not compensation, but "job respect and job security." Poof mentioned also the issues of favoritism and job security as priorities for the union.

The Treasurer of the College, Richard Eaton, said that the College is committed to "doing what we can to see if the employees make an enlightened decision" at the union vote. He said that between now and the election the "College will be presenting the facts to the employees," citing the over-abundance of rumors on campus.

Like Quinn, Eaton feels communication would be hindered with the formation of a union. He said, "I can't see to it that the employees make an enlightened decision at the union vote."
Letter from Publisher

To our readers:

Three years ago the Voice had a complete face-lift. Along with many changes in editorial content and graphic design, the editors adopted the motto Ad Fontes as the new name of our newspaper.

Today you see those two Latin words beneath the masthead on page one. The words mean "back to the sources." The phrase was originally adopted by Renaissance scholars who, in their recreation of Classical culture and tradition abandoned the use of Medieval commentaries of original Greek and Roman literature. They instead went back to the sources, that is, back to the original manuscripts which were then being rediscovered in old libraries and the ruins of antiquity.

The idea of those scholars was simple, yet significant. By returning to the original manuscripts they were able to get a precise understanding of ancient thought. Moreover this new comprehension was not filtered through centuries of faulty translations and cultural biases.

The Voice also seeks to obtain the unfiltered truth. By always going back to the sources of information we aspire to represent an objective reality. I hope that as we enter our twelfth year of operations we have succeeded in going back to the sources and provided our readers with the best possible newspaper.

Sincerely yours,
Fernando Espuelas-Asenjo

Concern expressed over Unity's future

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify some points in your recent article “Unity House’s future discussed.” The consensus of the concerns voiced over the renovation of an existing building or the construction of a new building on campus so that it could meet programs that promote diversity on the whole campus. The concern given to Unity House and minority concerns by the Voice in the article about “Unity House’s future discussed” are not necessarily bad. They can help a faculty member let go of the dogma of professorial infallibility and present himself (to quote A.N. Whitehead) “in his true character— that is as ignorant of what he knows as a man thinking, actively utilizing his small store of knowledge.”

Sincerely,
Michelle de la Uz, ’90
Co-Chair MSSC

Publication benefits faculty

To the Editor:

In relation to recent discussions of faculty scholarship I think that the administration should require at least some scholarly publication from the faculty. It would help faculty members identify with the problems of students, especially those students who have labored long and hard on a term paper only to come up with a grade of C. Thus faculty would be engaged in work much like that of students: gathering materials, organizing them, and presenting the finished product to an informed and critical audience for judgment. In this matter I speak from experience.

Ever since June, 1981 when I came running home from my last class in the second grade with a very good report card to present to my mum, I’ve had a distinct tendency to intellectual arrogance. But this attitude has suffered occasional humanizing setbacks. My last article was rejected by the editorial boards of six scholarly journals; it now rests in my bottom drawer. Such experiences are not necessarily bad. They can help a faculty member let go of the dogma of professorial infallibility and present himself (to quote A.N. Whitehead) “in his true character—that is as ignorant of what he knows as a man thinking, actively utilizing his small store of knowledge.”

Sincerely,
R. Birdsall

Mini-Series. The Mini-Series is comprised of a variety of lectures such as Juanita Castro (Feb. 24), Cesar Chavez (March 2), and the return of American Pictures (April 19). This year, both SAC and SGA have made a concerted effort to heighten cultural and political awareness on campus. By having world figures speak at Connecticut College and offering their invaluable insights and experiences, students are exposed to matters which cannot be taught in the classroom not learned from textbooks.

Presidential election reminds us of need to be involved in College Community

Monday, the 8th of February, and the Caucuses in Iowa, marked the official start of the 1988 Presidential campaign. The president, along with the senators, congressmen and state and local officials who will be elected at the same time, will obviously profoundly affect the lives of each and every one of us. However, if past trends hold true, more than half of us will not take the time to be part of their selection.

On this campus too, we are often content to sit back and allow decisions to be made for us. The very word community implies working together. The issues that affect this college community like the issues that affect this country, whether they be the questions of total divestment, of raising the enrollment, of providing for a more diverse student body or switching from Coca-Cola to Pepsi, are our issues and we should deal with them.

As important as the classes we take are, our education cannot be said to be truly complete if we have not in some way worked outside the classroom to make this community better. We all have a stake in the development of this college, and we must all work towards its improvement.

So, as our state and national elections approach, we cannot forget the importance of participating in the process. At the same time, as issues such as divestment, switching to a 3:2 faculty course load, and support staff discontent reach a critical level for our community, we cannot forget our role in building a better Connecticut College, in making the issues our own, in making a difference.

Racism:
A personal encounter
by David Steele Ewing
On December 15, I was walking through the first floor of Branford dormitory and was stopped by a Campus Safety officer who asked me if he could help me find someone. If I had told him who I was looking for, he would have said, "Oh, she lives right down the hall here," being the wise, intelligent people Campus Safety are. But this was not the case; I was stopped by Campus Safety for the crime of being black at a predominantly white institution.

After the initial confrontation, I asked the officer what business it was of his to ask who I was looking for. The officer replied that he had not seen me around here before and began to ask me several questions to see if I really did go here. First of all, I am a junior and, secondly, have not been locked in my room for the last two and a half years. While I disbelief that all this was happening, I questioned the officer about how long he had been here. He said he had worked for Campus Safety for ten years and that he felt he had made a major mistake in stopping me. The officer then attempted to cover up by acting like he was interested in what I did at Connecticut College. The next question was "You're on the basketball team, right?" While I am tall and black, I was angered by this type of generalization, especially from the man who stopped me, who assumed I actually did go here but the only reason being to play basketball. I guess he shares Jimmy the Greek's philosophy that black people's main purpose in America is to play on sports teams.

This was not the most alarming part of the confrontation. I hardly looked like an outsider when I was stopped. That evening, I looked like the typical disgruntled preppie Connecticut College student. I was wearing slacks, loafers, a turtleneck, tennis sweater and a toga. The only reason I looked like an outsider to the Campus Safety officer was because I'm black. While I feel Campus Safety does not have to know every black student that goes here, even though they should since there are only a few of us, they should not treat me or any of our brothers and sisters like strangers or as a threat to the College because we do not look like ninety-five percent of the students here.

Is Campus Safety really doing its job anyway? All it seems to be good at is breaking up parties at 1:00, unlocking doors, writing parking tickets and looking around campus in the jeeps. I have yet in the two and a half years since I've been here seen them apprehend an outsider in the act of endangering the students or stealing college property.

Where was Campus Safety when outsiders entered student rooms in Larrabee and Brinford this year? Where were they when someone went through every wallet and took all the money of the members of the men's crew last spring during crew camp? Where were they during the numerous break-ins and break-downs over vacations? I simply do not think that instead of Campus Safety asking me what I'm doing here, we should be asking them what they are doing. I'd sure like to know.

Finally, the main purpose of this letter might be seen as an attack on our incompetent Campus Safety staff or just more complaints about the small number of minority students here, but it is not. The Connecticut College community must learn. Minorities here already have many different needs and issues to deal with attending a school like this. To treat us like outsiders furthers the overall un-friendly and unceptive environment here. My case is hardly an isolated incident, as many other students have similar stories about racism here with students, professors, the administration, coaches, and yes, Campus Safety. We observe Black History Month in February as a time to see how far we have come and also, unfortunately once again, how much further we must go to end racism on college campuses and in America.

Food waste --
by John Maggiore
Last semester, one of the most talked about campus issues was the food waste problem. Bringing to the attention of students by a series of posters in dining halls, and articles in The Voice. While the issue initially generated considerable interest, it eventually died down. Several questions were raised, however, and they still remain: Why was the problem brought to the attention of the students in the first place? What can be done to reduce food waste? What has happened since the issue first came up? There are answers, however, the alternatives will depend on the approach to the problem of food waste: boxes to student responsibility.

Wesley Ferguson, '88, who has been involved with the Great Hunger Clean Up at Conn. for the past three years, initiated the movement to reduce waste at the school with the intent of making students more conscious of how much food they waste every day. The hope was that, upon learning of this daily waste problem, students would begin to make a conscious effort not to waste food.

This is, in fact, what happened at first, according to Matt Fay, the director of food services. The effects, however, were far from long-term, as food waste is back up to its old levels. According to Ferguson, bringing the issue up at a past year might be a good idea, but to bring it up every semester would be "bewitching the issue." A more permanent solution is needed.

Perhaps the most logical thing to do is as other schools do, and go on a portion system, where students have a specific amount of food, and be required to re-enter line to get more. As the estimates of Fly, this would not only reduce food waste, but hasten the line speed by taking some of the distraction away from students. The two problems with my proposed portion system would be a need for more workers, and more importantly, student dissatisfaction.

CUTTING CLASS:
Nothing is gained; much is lost
by Matt Sisson
A small group of my friends and I were going to drive to the Crystal Mall to eat lunch at the Food Court. On the way to the car I remembered that I had a 1:30 Spanish class. When I informed my friends that I'd never make it back in time for my class, they offered me these class-cutting a serious problem at Conn. "I wouldn't describe it as a major problem," said Brown. According to her, students are responsible for going to classes, and the ones who don't are missing out. Brown is content with the measures already taken by the College to prevent class-cutting: Mid-semester Progress Reports ask professors which students aren't working to the full potential. Besides, as Assistant Professor of Government here, "We are good at spot-checking." Yet I find it difficult to believe that professors don't get discouraged or even hurt when their students don't bother to show up for class. The day I snowed last semester, less than half my economics class bothered to show up. Our teacher, Carla Dickstein, walked into the room right as class was about to begin and apologized that she could not have been there sooner but that traffic on her daily commute from Boston was backed up for two hours. I asked her how she felt after struggling so long to be on time only to find that less than half the class cared enough to go. Dickstein said, "It doesn't make me happy, but I assume that the ones who aren't coming to class are still getting their work done."

Racial integration at Conn.
--Has there been any improvement?

by Aleksandar Stoddard

"When issues are being talked about, progress is truly being made. Now we're at a start, we are talking. We still haven't convinced everyone that what was done [Flaring Takeover, May 1986] was right, but at least there isn't the deathly silence that existed before between majority and minority students," said Lee Williams, '88, Housefellow of Smith dormitory.

Williams, who is black, said that he believes that the state of interaction between minority and majority students on campus has not improved substantially since he came to Conn. in 1984.

"It's a little better. I don't think there's an overwhelming difference. I think the situation has improved because of more of an awareness of minorities and and minority issues on campus," said Williams.

According to Williams, awareness of minority concerns is the most crucial element in developing better integration between minority and majority students. "Creating an awareness, of the differences between us, and enjoying and celebrating those differences," Cynthia Fazzarri, '88, Housefellow of Larrabee dormitory, said she has seen "a lot of development" since she came to Conn. freshman year. "One thing that comes up forum after forum, and discussion after discussion is why minority students always sit together. That question is always asked by a majority student. It is a question that I myself would have been asking four years ago, and now it is a question that I know how to answer. This comes from having minority students as my classmates and as my friends."

Fazzarri said that she thinks it is up to the individual to develop that awareness. "It is up to them to pick themselves up and go to these meetings, and become aware. No matter how many parties S.A.C. will throw, no matter how many cultural programs there are, it is the individual's responsibility." "Improving awareness doesn't mean spending a lot of money to have huge events. It is by incorporating more minority-type events into everyday, said Williams. "There are some English professors who now teach black authors. It doesn't cost anything. It's just improving the curriculum to reflect what America is supposed to be."

"The majority of people have lost interest. We used to get 250 people at a meeting, and now it's less. "I don't think the situation has gotten better. There are more minorities here, but once minorities get here, there's nothing to keep them here," Johnson, who is black, said.

According to Johnson, the college must continue to promote and encourage minorities "to prove that we are good in our G.P.A.'s and not to let the color of our skin fool people."

House governance procedures set to be changed?

OFFICER REPORTS
S.A.C.: For Fall '88, the first Marli Grazls is being held in Cro. on Feb. 24, Fidel Castro's sister is coming to speak, as part of the Human Rights Minority Students Committee.

COMMITTEE REPORTS
Welfare: '88, spoke on behalf of the Board of Advisory Chairmen and gave their proposal to deal with upcoming academic issues which affect Connecticut College, as well as the possible course load change to a S.5 system, and how the student advisory committees are supposed to work.

Greg Gillette, '88, spoke for the Alcohol Policy and Recommendations Committee, to all house presidents reminded students about the new gues pass system. Also, the committee needs a new at-large member.

OLD BUSINESS
Devent President: Rob Hale, '88, spoke about the upcoming forum to discuss the divestment issue. It will be held in the East Common Room on Feb. 16 and 17, 10:00 P.M. There will be a native South African in addition to some faculty members. The referendum vote will be held on April 28, 1988.

House Governance Proposal: S.G.A. suspended the Proposal for 45 minutes to discuss the proposal of changing the position of House President into two positions: House Senator and House Chairman. The House Senator would encompass all the duties concerning the S.G.A., while the House Chairman would take the duties of the House Financial Manager and the dorm responsibilities of House President. This proposal received mixed reviews from the assembly. There will be a hearing held next week at S.G.A. meeting at 6:30 P.M. for housefellow's, S.A.C., and students-at-large to give their opinions on the issue.

Last week's meeting:
Divestment referendum February 16 & 17

Thursday, January 28
S.G.A. voted on the issue of total divestment from Connecticut College's holdings in South Africa to the entire student body, via a referendum, as a result of Rev. Stallings' disapproval to his earlier principles. Both the S.G.A. Assembly, in February, 1987, and the Shareholders Responsibility Committee, in August, 1987, have voted for total divestment. The referendum election has been scheduled for Tues.

and Wed., Feb. 16 and 17, in the Post Office.

The Shareholders Responsibility Committee will also be holding educational forums to present both sides of the issue.

This S.G.A. has begun to re-evaluate the house governing system in the dormitories. Critical discussions will begin in two weeks; those interested are encouraged to attend meetings at 6:45 P.M. on Thursday nights in Conn. Cave.

Millstone proves safe and efficient

Practically in Connecticut College's, back yard there is a nuclear power plant. No one hears about it. There has never been a significant accident there. It does, however, supply part of the 33.4 percent of New England's nuclear power and serves as a major source of employment for the New London area.

Says Millstone Energy Center Director Gregory Wilson, "We have an open communication between North East Utilities and the surrounding communities. The Millstone Power Station, comprised of three separately housed reactors, began service in 1970 when the first reactor, Millstone I, went on line. The last reactor, Millstone III is scheduled to be in service until the year 2025. At this time Northeast Utilities must apply to Nuclear Regulatory Commission for replenishing. According to Wilson, Millstone uses a system of on-site disposal. This means that all spent fuel rods, because they have the longest radioactive half-life, must be kept on-site until they are no longer radioactive.

Millstone has not taken any of these rods off of the plant sight because there is no Federally approved disposal site at this time. The 5500 cubic feet of low-level waste produced by Northeast Utilities four New England Plants is shipped to both Washington state and South Carolina. According to Dr. William Niering, professor of Botany at Connecticut College, "Since 1975 the projected use of nuclear power for producing electricity throughout the world has decreased sharply because of concern over safety and the need to find safe and politically acceptable methods of storing high-level radioactive waste for hundreds of thousands of years."

Also located on Millstone Point, along with the power station, is the Northeast Utilities Environmental Laboratory. Environmental studies began around Millstone Point in 1968, two years before Millstone I went on-line. Until 1977 studies conducted around Millstone were conducted by Woods Hole and Battelle Laboratories among others. In 1977 Northeast Utilities established a permanent laboratory.

Despite being owned and run by Northeast Utilities, the Environmental Laboratory is subject to review by an independent review board. All studies conducted at the laboratory are analyzed by this board. "The [Northeast Utilities] monitoring lab is probably one of the best, impartial laboratories in the area," says Niering. In past years, Niering has taken his students to the laboratory as part of his course curriculum. There are 20 full-time biologists on staff at the laboratory with ability levels ranging from Ph.D.'s to graduate students.

Review - Das Rheingold, Richard Wagner

The Metropolitan opera premiered a new production of Richard Wagner’s “Das Rheingold” this season, as part of its new “Ring Cycle” which will be completed next season with the installment of “Gotterdammerung”. “Das Rheingold” is the first segment of Wagner’s immense tetralogy, and the Met’s new production would please even the most hard-core Wagnerite.

The team of Otten Scheden, producer, Gunther Shneider, designer, and Gil Wescher, lighting designer, created a fairy-tale world of magic and brilliant stage effects which kept the audience at the edge of their seats throughout the two and half hour work. The fish bowl set of the first segment of the two hour and thirty minute work was notably aquatic. In the second scene on the mountaintop, Valhalla loomed majestically in the background, inviting the gods to enter their new home. In the final scene a rainbow magically materialized before the viewer’s eyes, just one of the many moments of special effects this production afforded. The most effective scene of all took place in the Nibelheim. This production ably created the descent into the darker world of Nibelheim, even showing the Nibelungs at their forges for a brief moment. Alberich carried off his transformations into a grotesque and highly effective dwarf Alberich was every inch of the villainous dwarf was articulated bass, his Alberich was vocally and characterically a tour de force.

For the Dance Services “Collaborations” Gala in Hartford in the first of three engagements which highlight student and faculty choreography.

We submitted our videotapes of three works and all were chosen for the Gala,” said Annette Packard, Assistant Professor of Dance. Of five Connecticut College artists, three were chosen for the showcase: Peter Brummett (MFA candidate), Clifford Shulman (guest artist and MFA candidate), and Packard.

At Bates University both Packard and Jennifer Keller, ’89, presented pieces for adjudication. “One of our alumni, Lynn Lesnik, who is a guest artist this semester, was discovered at the festival a few short years ago,” said Packard.

that 'a union would take the employee out of the direct loop' of communication with the administration.

Eaton is pleased at how both sides in the union debate have acted during the negotiations. "Both sides," said Eaton, "have been fair and totally above board."

Hobblie Walton, chairman of the employee committee, formed two months ago to iron out disagreements between the administration and the Physical Plant workers, said that his committee "has made some progress on issues sparking employee discontent, but we could have made more." He said that the administration has been 'dragging its feet' on some issues, such as the policy of keeping employees on-call in case of emergencies on campus after hours.

Walton pointed to progress in the issues of eliminating the third shift custodians, getting shift premium pay for certain missed days, and the hiring of a few more custodians. He said, however, that the custodians are still under-staffed, as are other areas in the department of Physical Plant.

Walton said "it did not seem to [him] that the College was committed to maintaining its buildings." The Physical Plant employees first started to vocalize dissent last spring after the administration had brought in an outside consulting firm. The Facilities Resources Management Company (F.R.M.), to help manage the College's physical plant. The Director of Facilities Operations, F.R.M.'s managerial representative to the College, Peter Tveskov, stepped down in November, to be replaced with Acting Director, Al Popoli, region vice-president of F.R.M.

Last month Popoli was replaced by Acting Director, Donald Santotefano. Santotefano, who has only recently joined F.R.M., feels he was chosen for his current position because of his strong technical background. He said that he could not comment on the current union situation.

"It's wrong for a school of this caliber not to have funds similar to Wesleyan's," stated Justin Cohane, '91. The reputation of Conn. is viewed as a major barrier in the raising of money. "It's a good college without a name," said Mark Howes, '89.

The Board of Trustees is scheduled to vote on the issue of divestment in South Africa soon. The policy of divestment is seen by many students as a factor that will affect the endowment. "If and when we do divest, we should see where we should put the money," said Cohane.

Some students believe that divestment will only hurt the school. "Divestment is morally right. But, looking at the College's small endowment, we can't afford to do it right now," said Payer. "We must wait for favorable market conditions," he said.

According to Chunners, a certain amount of the endowment is in unrestricted funds. This means that the money can be used as Conn. sees fit. It is generally used to supplement the operating costs. The other portion of the money is in the form of restricted funds which the donor gave with a specific purpose intended.

The Development Office is optimistic about its fund-raising efforts for the future and assures that increasing the annual endowment will be a continuing interest of Conn.

day. Newsweek reported that many labs require their lab technicians to examine sometimes 200 or 300 slides per day which can cause flaws in the results since the analyses are rushed.

Concerning the switch of labs, Buckley said, "There is no sense in taking a chance."

Students who received the Pap test last semester are only suggested and not required to return for a test since the chance that the previous tests were faulty is very low. Stanislawski said that the Pap test results from Lawrence and Memorial of the few women who came back for retests were the same as the results from the California lab.

Buckley said, "At this age the incidence of cervical cancer is low. The students should come back every year for a test anyway. Due to budgetary concerns and the lack of an emergency situation, the Health Center has decided not to offer free retests for those women who could possibly have false results from the Conn. lab in California. If a student can not afford to pay for another test she can then, the Health Center will take care of the cost. Buckley and Stanislawski both recommended that women who are sexually active receive a Pap test every year. Buckley said that in the past doctors suggested that women who had two consecutive tests with normal results only return for a test every three years. Buckley, however, that a change in the nature of cervical cancer has occurred and that regardless of repeated normal results, sexual activity should receive a Pap test once a year.

Hockey team continues to roll

by Julius Ciembroniewicz
The College Voice

The Connecticut College Men's Hockey Team skated to a 3-1 tie against St. Anselm's on January 16. It was the Camels first game in a month, and the team suffered because of the long layoff, but Coach Doug Roberts, who was released with squad's efforts.

"Getting over that game with the tie got us back to where we were before break," Roberts said.

With no goals scored in the first period, St. Anselm's opened the scoring in the second period. CONN struck back as senior winger Tim Buono scored the first of his two goals to knot the game at 1-1.

CONN came back to tie the game again at 2-2 when John Hutchinson; and a pair of goals from freshmen Mark Smaltz was also cited as Defender Junior Mike Moccia, continued his hot pace; scoring four goals and adding four assists. Roberts was pleased with his first game in a month, and the 3-3 tie against St. Anselm's on January 27.

CONN will swim at Westfield State University later this month. Details in Intramural Update.

Women's swim team sets records

by Kelly Bernier
The College Voice

The Connecticut College Women's Swim Team has not fared well in their last three meets, posting losses against Southern Connecticut, Colby, and Mount Holyoke.

However, Coach Cliff Larabee was excited with the team's performances and confessed that the squad has "not had a disappointing meet yet." Larabee's optimism rests on the fact that the Camels have been putting forth outstanding performances, cutting down school records, and qualifying people for the upcoming New England Championships.

CONN lost 66-56 to Mount Holyoke last Tuesday. Co-captain Sheila Leniart ('89) closed a 55.29 in the 100 yard backstroke, and a 2:06.39 in the 200 yard freestyle to place first in both events, breaking two of her own school records.

Leniart captured these same events in the meets against Southern Connecticut and Colby.

Larabee calls Leniart, Louise Van Order ('90), and Anne Traer ('91) "pretty outstanding." All three have won at least two events apiece in every meet.

"Louise has rewritten the breaststroke record list," Larabee said.

In fact, Van Order, now holds all CONN's breaststroke records, after breaking the 100 yard (1:14.45) and 200 yard (2:41.32) marks against Southern Connecticut on January 27.

She has also had her share of record breaking performances. She presently holds three backstroke marks (50 yards, 100 yards, 200 yards), and sits on two record-holding marks (200 yards, 200 meters).

"Anne is going crazy as a backstroke," Larabee said of the freshman. "She has also been swimming with very sore shoulders, but she consistently puts forth her best effort.

Larabee commented on two standout swimmers who have proven themselves to be exceptional--Sarah Jennings ('91) and Sarah Rosenblatt ('90). Jennings, who before this year had no previous competitive experience, swam the 50 yard freestyle in the January 30th meet against Colby. According to Larabee, it is the second best time for any swimmer on the team.

"Only Sheila [Leniart] has done better," Larabee said. "I think that's a pretty good accomplishment for a beginner." Larabee is extremely pleased with Rosenblatt.

"Sarah did the impossible the other night," Larabee said, referring to CONN's meet against Mount Holyoke.

Rosenblatt swam the 1000 yard backstroke to earn her third (13:30.41). She then came back and won the 200 yard butterfly (2:46.33), and then volunteered to swim the 500 yard freestyle.

"That is 1,700 yards of complete swimming in one night," Larabee said. "Almost no one would agree to do that.

"That is a win against Westfield State this Wednesday night, before hosting Wesleyan on Saturday night.

Intramural Update

by Kieran N. Xanthos
The College Voice

Winter intramurals continued this week with the start of A-League Basketball.

Commissioner Burke (LaClair) is pleased with the number of teams participating (eight), and the level of competition.

LaClair does see one squad as "the team to beat," --McF, led by Jim Borah ('89).

"They have the advantage because of their balanced offense," LaClair said.

In the MFC's 59-29 victory over the Rhinos, three MFC players scored in double figures (Borah, 14; Billy Dwyer ('88), 11; Tim Killenberg ('88), 10). "The key to winning the league is not only the production of the top two scorers, but also the play of the other three men on the court," LaClair said.

Two other blowouts on the opening night of play featured Public Enemy Number One over the Alumini 92-42, and the Squids over the Chambeleans' 62-35.

Leading Public Enemy Number One to victory were Terrace Powell ('88) and Leo Bellamy ('89), scoring 32 and 31 points respectively.

The Squids were led by senior Kevin Wolfe who netted 17 points in a close game, the Parking Tree Spiders edged the Larry's 53-48. John Burns ('88) scored 19 points for BTS.

A-League games are played on Sundays (12:00 and 2:00) and Wednesdays (8:00 and 9:00) at the athletic center.

The season runs until spring break, with all eight teams qualifying for the playoffs.

Floor hockey resumes this week. Details in next issue.

Women's squash drops 2

by Beth McKierman
The College Voice

The new year has not brought good tidings to the Connecticut College Women's Squash Team. Thus far in 1988, the squad has suffered two sound losses to the more experienced teams of Amherst and Oberlin.

On January 30, in CONN's first home match of the season, the Camels faced the top-notch Lady Jeffs of Amherst. CONN came out of the contest without winning a game, dropping the match 8-0.

"We were outmatched by a much more experienced team," Coach Sheryl Yearby said.

However, Yeary was quite pleased with the progress her first-year team has made, but emphasizes that "in terms of match experience CONN is still the 'new kid on the block.'"

This past weekend, the squad had a chance to compete against a number of teams in the Howe Cup at Yale. Hoping to gain a great deal of court experience in this tournament, Yeary looks to the rest of the schedule with "optimism and confidence."
Sawyer scores 1000th
by Marc LaPlace
Sports Editor

"I spend my whole life on the foul line," senior Scott Sawyer said after CONN's 84-62 home victory over Williams College on Saturday.

What better a place then for Sawyer to score his 1000th career point. Where he would score the winning point in the final second of the game.

Just 2:58 into the contest, with Williams leading 4-2, Sawyer walked up to the foul stripe, calmly sank two free throws, the Eagles third and fourth points of the game, but more importantly, Sawyer's 999th and 1000th of his career, earning him the game ball and causing a shower of confetti to erupt from the stands.

Sawyer would go on to nail three more free throws on the day, before finding himself at the line, this time with the game on the one and second left to play.

Again, Sawyer coolly hit them both. Points number 20 and 21 in the game for Sawyer, marking one of the best seasons ever for the Eagles. But more importantly here, points 83 and 84 for the Eagles, good enough for the team's fourth straight victory.

"It's great to get to the 1000th point," Sawyer said. "It's nice to get it on the line too, because I spend so much time there.

Sawyer becomes CONN's sixth male to reach the 1000 points mark in his career, Martin Schoepfer feels that Sawyer truly deserves.

Men's swim team holding its own
by Jean Wilen
Colby College Voice

The Connecticut College Men's Swim Team's record of 1-4 does not sound impressive, but Coach Cliff Larrabee is pleased with the improvement that this first-year squad comes to show with every meet.

"The men are doing a great job for being a first-year varsity team," Larrabee said. "We're competing against excellent teams that represent the high level of swimming found in New England and the world.

On January 30, a tough Colby team topped CONN by a score of 52-29. But, while the Camels suffered a hard loss, they also shattered two Connecticut College records.

Rob Lowney ('87), Devon Coughlan ('89), Paul Dunnder ('89), and Mike Mahoney ('91) captured second place in the 400 yard medley relay with a time of 4:08.25, establishing a new school record.

Mahoney won the 200 yard individual medley (2:12.93) and placed second in the 100 yard freestyle (.54.16), breaking two records in the process.

"What can I say? Mahoney is a tremendous swimmer," Larrabee said. "He has already qualified for the New England Championships, in the 200 individual medley, and the 100 and 200 freestyles. He has a great future ahead of him."

Another excellent performance was turned in by Coughlan, who won the 200 yard breaststroke with a record time of 2:43.02. Last Wednesday night, the Camels hosted Brandeis, and lost a close, exciting meet by a score of 55-40.

Larrabee was disappointed with his team's loss, but points to the fact that everyone swam extremely well and gave all that they had in their effort to win.

"I am very proud of our performance," Larrabee said. "They swam hard as they could to the right end.

Four CONN swimmers captured first place in their individual events.

Iain Anderson ('90) swept both the 50 yard freestyle (24.79) and the 100 yard freestyle (.54.07).

Mahoney followed in Anderson's wake, winning the 200 yard freestyle (1:54.59), as well as the 100 yard backstroke (1:03.64). Dunnder placed first in the 100 yard butterfly (58.51), while Lowney won the 500 yard freestyle (5:32.92).

Larrabee was especially pleased with Anderson's performance.

"I expect a lot from him [Anderson] in the future," Larrabee said. "I've had him swim in races that he does not particularly like, but he has done so willingly for the sake of the team."

"He won two races against Brandeis, and they were very good times.

The Camels last two regular season meets are against Trinity and Wesleyan, and Larrabee is confident that Lowney, Anderson, Dunnder, Paul Clauss ('88), and Andrew Bechgard ('89) all have good chances of qualifying for the New England Championships at one of these meets.

The Camels host Wesleyan this Saturday at 7:00 p.m.

f Men's basketball team knocks off Coast Guard, Trinity by Gregory Long
Colby College Voice

The Connecticut College Men's Basketball Team is certainly one of mind these days. A winning feeling, a sense of confidence, and a deep gratitude to the Coast Guard Academy have seemingly swept the team.

That's right. The Camels are extremely grateful for the 85-75 overtime win (1/25) against the Cadets. Not that the game was handed to the Camels, but the win has done wonders for the 7-5 squad.

"The Coast Guard game got us going," forward Ed Hoffman ('89) said. "The fact that we fought back to win in overtime gave us momentum."

Rest for center Marty Joyce ('88) agreed. "That game gave us confidence. It proved that we can win close games—big games."

"This is their [the seniors] time, Their leadership has got to come to the fore and set the example," Larrabee said. "They are the seniors, Dunnder, Paul Clauss ('88), and Mike Mahoney ('91) all have a good chance of getting to the NCAA post-season play."

"The four teams we played were all New England teams," Larrabee said. "Wesleyan was ranked fifth in Division III when we played them [the Camels split two games with Wesleyan].

"You know, it's easy to take Scott for granted," Schoepfer said. "If he doesn't score 30 points a game, Scott's performance doesn't stand out. Yet for the past three years, Scott has been our top scorer and one of our top rebounders."

Entering this past Saturday's contest against Williams, Schoepfer had 11 points and seven boards, and Schoepfer gained five steals in another fine defensive display.

Yet, in the big game, the big gun definitely was Sawyer. Sawyer joined WAYNE MALINOWSKI ('81), PETER DORFMAN ('84), and JOE HOFFMAN ('89), and a tough pressure defense led by guards Frank Lombardo ('89) and Dave Schuer ('88).

The next game, however, would not be as easy one either as CONN readied a home match with the ever-tough Bantams of Trinity College. CONN had beaten Trinity in four years, until last Saturday (1/30), that is.

CONN won the game 70-69 on the foul line, hitting 22 of 24, while Trinity only converted 15 of 22.

Hoffman had 11 points and seven boards, and Schoepfer garnered five steals in another fine defensive display.

Another excellent performance was turned in by Gregory Long, who won the 200 yard butterfly (1:54.59), as well as the 100 yard backstroke (1:03.64). Dunnder placed first in the 100 yard butterfly (58.51), while Lowney won the 500 yard freestyle (5:32.92).
