Lecture by Sir Leslie Munro U.N. Contribution to Peace

by Ann Franks '59

The faculty, students, and guests of the College were privy early in February to a free public lecture by Sir Leslie Munro, President of the recent General Assembly of the United Nations General Assembly. The speaker was invited to be on campus and is well known as an editor of the New York Times, and his lecture was concerned with the general theme of "The United Nations and World Peace.

The lecture was well attended, and the audience was moved by Sir Leslie's eloquent and thoughtful presentation. He began by stating that the United Nations was not a substitute for world government but rather a means of bringing nations together to work towards common goals.

Sir Leslie then went on to discuss the role of the United Nations in maintaining world peace. He emphasized the importance of the UN in providing a forum for discussion and negotiation between nations, and in enforcing international laws.

He also spoke of the UN's role in helping to resolve conflicts, and the need for nations to work together to address global challenges such as climate change and poverty.

Sir Leslie Munro's lecture was a thoughtful and inspiring introduction to the topic of the United Nations and world peace. It provided a valuable perspective on the role of the UN in our world today.

Ave atque Vale

We wish to congratulate all of the candidates for the student government offices—both the winners and the losers. Becoming a candidate for such an office is hardly less of an honor than winning itself. But our very special congratulations go to the many candidates for the student government who did not run for their office—at least not in the usual way. We are very grateful to all but not in particular to her newly acquired position for the past two and one half years. She filed no petition, she circulated no petition, she made no speeches. She has done no more than her very best since she has come to Connecticut.

We are speaking, of course, of our new editor. Our choice is a wise one; we are sure that she will be of the help of her editorial board, will be able to surpass the goals we set for ourselves this time last year. We have seen many changes in the world, in the country, and in our college since we assumed the responsibilities of our positions just one short year ago. These changes are inevitable; they will probably be many due to the ability of the girls who comprise the new staff to meet these changes and to turn them to our advantage.

We have the utmost confidence in the ability of the girls who comprise the new staff to meet the demands of the increased and growing responsibility which the new officers will face. In the climb. We have but two consolations: we have our horizon set high as we have always done. We have understood the difficulties inherent in the climb. We have but two consolations: we have our best wishes for the several tasks that lie before us.

Neither vastness of territory... or separating shield of oceans offers security in case of a world war." It is necessary now, more than ever before in our history, to recognize the fact that all powers have an equal desire for survival. The only answer would seem to lie either in the cessation of tests or in something similar to the plan proposed by Baruch: international control of weapons. An answer may or may not come out of the proposed Summit talks; Sir Leslie expressed his doubt that a failure of Summit powers to reach a decision could have serious consequences insofar as the peoples' faith in government leaders is concerned. Perhaps it would be more prudent to "work in theory."
