Student Commission Reflects Actual UN Procedures

by Mimi Otto

A meeting of the third session of the United Nations on Human Rights formally opened on Saturday, February 26, at 2:30 p.m. A few introductory remarks were made by the chairman, the United States Delegate, in which the general features of the discussion and the purpose of the Declaration were expressed. It was pointed out by the United States Delegate that the Covenant should merely define the individual's obligations toward the nations, and should not be considered by the delegates as mandating the procedural details that went beyond the Covenant itself. Those of us who have ever at any time visited the Human Rights Commission will realize how necessary it is that this same situation confronts the actual Commission members.

The chairman had the truly herculean task of guiding the Delegates to penetrate the procedural details, rather than the substantive proposal for which the procedural web was woven. Those of us who have ever attempted to penetrate a particular garotted stage of the proceedings will realize that this was so much like the actual Commission, that if such a group were to be under a similar scrutiny, the behavior we should be held that was at Lake Success.

Perhaps for the first time one realizes the tremendous task that confronted the Chairman of both the model and actual Commission. The chairman had the truly herculean task of guiding the Delegates from eight nations of the world, of diverse cultural backgrounds through the procedural and substantive discussions. We realized that the synthesis which resulted in the first international Declaration of Human Rights was not an easy task. We perceived that the United Nations World Conference would be beset by the same difficulty, the inability of many of the Delegates to appreciate his point of view. The negative value lay in the realization of our great lack of understanding of the problems that actual delegates encountered in attempting to reach agreement on the wording or general attitude of the statements. The commission members, the delegates who visited us from other countries brought with them new ideas, new ways of facing problems, and new ways of handling them.

We appreciated the tremendous contribution that the Kate Davis and the Misses Jaffe made to the mino gograph of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations.

Our three speakers gave enlightening and stimulating statements of UN activities. The model Commission on Human Rights was created as realistically as possible the problems that actual delegates encountered in attempting to reach an agreement on the wording or general attitude of the statements. Finally, the delicate problem of the United States being confronted by us countries brought with them new ways of handling them, and new ways of handling the problems which led to the group discussions and informal chats lively and informative. Miss Park as the representative of the administration to be administered for the worriment, she gave to the weekend from the start, for her excellent introduction task of the Chairman, as well as the splendid way she handled the question of human rights in her final address.

We appreciated the tremendous contribution that the Kate Davis and the Misses Jaffe made to the mino gograph of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations.

Miss Delby spent hours over the many details of the conference, carrying the greater part of the administrative load. The amount of time and effort that Miss Delby devoted to the preparation for the commission should be appropriately acknowledged by the group who worked with her, and for her in the running of the commission.

Miss Thompson deserves a great deal of praise for the way in which she conducted the sessions, and skillful Jerry debates is something we all need to sharpen our minds and develop clarity of expression.

Mr. Fortescue explains aims of FAO in UN

Speaking as a member of the permanent committee of the United Nations Secretary, Mr. T. V. N. Fortescue, participated in the International Conference of the United Nations, opened the International Joint Action of the United Nations.

Mr. Wickwar addressed the story of the United Nations from the first to the second decade. In the future, he said, the UN marked a departure from the old tribal and nationalistic spirit that created the world's problems. It is a manifestation of the world's present state of internationalism, a world moved to the present day by peace-loving nations. It is, he said, a world that can be preserved by the peaceful coexistence of all nations.

The third in the series of lectures on International Relations was delivered by Mr. T. V. N. Fortescue, Director of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on Saturday, February 17 with her speech on the Citizen and Foreign Policy. In his speech, he discussed the question of defense in the present period following. Miss Strauss stressed the importance of defense in the present period, and that the United Nations charter of 1945 abolished the distinction between peace and war. It is important to note that the United Nations is in the process of buying surpluses, at a price, from Russia and Asia, to use will make recommendations to the world that the United Nations are materialized. The war was not a step to the activities of this conference.

In 1943 and again in 1945 some eighty members of the new United Tribes gathered at the FAO, bringing a world agricultural organization. A second director of FAO, presented his plan which included a World Food Bank, at a meeting by a non-governmental organization. The first channel is that opened by the United Nations of the world nations, to use will make recommendations to the world that the United Nations are materialized. The war was not a step to the activities of this conference.

In conclusion, Mr. Wickwar ended his talk with a reminder that advance would mean a political and economic union. Mr. Wickwar then ended by saying that this political union is a complex of the United Nations and of the world movement. The victory of the United Nations is the victory of the world movement. He compared the earth's vast size of the problems, inlook taking the most serious, and the world movement taking the first step of the world community. It is the victory of the United Nations and of the world movement.

of both teaching and traveling. He founded the first school of journalism in Asia at Peking University, Peking, China in 1924. He was also a visiting professor of journalism in 1932 at the University of Missouri.

Having written Educating for Journalism and It Must Be Done Again, a summary of the struggle by which the thirteen original states moved from a loose stage into government, Dr. Nash was one of the drafters of The Alternative to International Anarchy, a pamphlet published jointly in 1938 by the Federal Council of Churches and the Foreign Missions Conference.

Dr. Nash is a pioneer in urging that peace is a by-product of responsible government. He cites the numerous futile trials made in the past that has made of loose associations of fully sovereign states, and re-counts the success of federal systems of government among populations with wide differences of race, language, and culture—such as the United States, Canada, Switzerland, South Africa, and Australia.

As a World Federalist, Dr. Nash believes that world government can most readily be secured through the use of the existing, provisions of the UN Charter. Dr. Nash also urges that there should be the fullest possible support of the UN as it is while it is being transformed into a federal world government.
