The Housing Lottery came and went smoother than many expected. Get a full recap of all the details on page 6.

The renovation will be financed as a result of a $45 million philanthropic initiative launched in November 1998 by the College’s largest donor, the late William H. Neukom. The renovation is intended to improve the physical condition of the College.

According to Chris Civali, senior vice president for Administration, the project will enhance the College’s physical infrastructure.

Cruz-Saco was born and raised in Lima, Peru. She received her B.A. from the Universidad del Pacifico in Lima, and proceeded to earn her M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh. Cruz-Saco is an economist by trade and an expert in property rights. She has published numerous articles on property rights, employment and social security, and aging with old age. She has contributed chapters and articles to various professional books in housing policy, authored three and co-edited two books, and has written in various housing policy journals.

In addition to her impressive professional career, Cruz-Saco has served in various faculty leadership positions, including chair of the Department of Economics at Connecticut College. Cruz-Saco says that she has enjoyed every single minute at Connecticut College, particularly its strong community and commitment to academic excellence. She also noted her high regards for her colleagues in general, and specifically “the outstanding teacher-scholars” in the economics department. Cruz-Saco says she has learned from the effective teaching methods of her peers and her commitment to working closely with students, and truly considers the pushing of students to develop their full academic potential. David Milstein, Dean of Student Life, called Cruz-Saco “a moved scholar and teacher in one of Connecticut’s most popular majors.”

Conn Open House Welcomes Accepted Students

By Josuha Sales

Sprang has arrived at Connecticut College, and with the change of season comes an influx of new faces eager to explore the campus. The College had over 4,200 applicants for the class of 2009 and admitted just 1,397. On April 11th and 12th, the campus community will welcome as many as 600 of the accepted members of the class of 2009.

The program was designed to highlight the campus’ unique environment and potential College mentors. Alexander Scott, one of the event organizers, hopes that the Day will “help admitted students learn more about the intellectual, philosophical, and social climate at the University of Connecticut.”

Both sessions are scheduled to begin with a tour of the campus, followed by addresses given by Marcia Mitchell, director of admissions, and Norman Fainstein, Connecticut College’s president. Members of the class of 2009, Gabe Gold, Emma Kogel and Sujata Tuldhar will also speak about their academic and extracurricular experiences at Connecticut College.

Conn Student To Work On Buffalo Field Campaign

By Josuha Sales

Put most students, Spring Break brings to mind visions of sandy beaches, pristine blue ocean and relaxation under the warm sun. However, four Connecticut College students, Laura Zerna, Anna Meyer and Rachel Chase, chose to spend their break in a more productive way. Last week, Zerna, Meyer and Chase, a former member of the Buffalo Field Campaign’s executive board, decided to help by volunteering for the campaign.

Zerna described the entire experience this past month as “fascinating to chair the commission.” She noted that “the commission” was “informed by the College, which complements her work.”

This unique experience, says Scott, “encourages the parents to connect with faculty from academic disciplines where their children may have a particular interest. Often, feedback from prospective parents notes this as one of the highlights of the College tour.”

Most importantly, students will be able to experience the college classroom dynamics by attending a variety of different classes during their visit. Parents and students get a taste of campus life through a lunch with the faculty and administration of the college.

A variety of events are also scheduled for the day, including tours of the Athletic Center, Residence Halls, the Curtinings Art Center, and the Arboretum. Prospective students will also have the chance to audition for various dance groups, learn about the strong theatre and music programs, explore study away options and attend a screening of Christian Powell’s Wild Behavior.

EDITORIAL&OPINION

Administration Ignores Our Voice

In last week's joke issue, we published an editorial that poked fun at the large number of errors that occur regularly in The Voice. This article was written in the spirit of April Fools. Contrary to its light-hearted tone, the pervasive abundance of errors in this paper is a problem that disgraces The Voice. Despite our intellectual investment and general dedication to the newspaper, the circumstances under which we work prevent us from producing a paper that fulfills the College's intellectual and creative potential.

A student newspaper reflects directly on a college’s quality of education, range of extra-curricular activities, and student initiative. Alums interested in their former Alma Mater look to The Voice for insight on campus news and the type of students currently shaping the campus. According to sources at Admissions, parents and students gauge this publication in almost every case. Our group regularly comments on The Voice’s reputation for blatant, objectionable types. People in and outside of the College community categorize The Voice by its shortcomings, and they aren't incorrect to do so.

What many people do not know is that the source of these problems is largely financial. The number and quality of computers in The Voice office are utterly insufficient. Only one computer is equipped with the program we use to layout the paper and The Voice’s non-summer edition alternate use of one of this computer on Thursday nights. The computer is so out-dated that it freezes and must be re-started a handful of times every Thursday. When this happens, all unsaved work is lost. How can we properly focus on relative details such as typos when we do not have the necessary resources to layout a newspaper?

Every academic year, The Voice makes a request to the Student Finance Committee for money to buy new computers and copies of our layout program. The Committee repeatedly refuses these funds, and we understand that SSA does not have the financial resources to do this. It's up to the administration to provide us with the equipment we need to properly create a student newspaper. Many of us want to public and private high schools that supplied computers and layout programs with dozens of computers, each equipped with layout programs. It is incomprehensible for one of the country’s top liberal arts college’s to fall remarkably short of standards set by high school newspapers.

As editors, we understand that people are unable to invest more money into this publication. We understand that this is a difficult issue to properly address. The Voice is not here to handle financial issues. We are very grateful for the administration’s decision to create a newspaper department. We ask that the administration make a request to the College to provide us with the equipment we need to properly layout a student newspaper.

Despite our intellectual investment and general dedication to the newspaper, the circumstances under which we work prevent us from producing a paper that fulfills the College’s intellectual and creative potential.

DARFUR: WHILE THE WORLD LOOKS AWAY

ZACH WEST - Go WEST, YOUNGMAN!

For the past month, the American public has been distracted by the Boston Red Sox. The team has been generating headlines with its road to the World Series. Meanwhile, the international community has been witnessing a humanitarian disaster that has been going on for five years. The conflict in Darfur is one of the worst humanitarian crises of our time, yet it has been largely ignored. In fact, it is estimated that at least one million people have been internally displaced, over half million people are facing famine, and countless thousands more have lost their homes. The situation in Darfur is so dire that the United Nations Security Council has not been able to agree on a course of action. This is not to say that the United Nations is doing nothing; rather, it is the case that the United Nations has been unable to agree on anything.

The Darfur crisis is the most alarming humanitarian catastrophe facing the world today. Unfortunately, an estimated two to three hundred thousand Darfuris have been murdered. Those fortunate enough to escape the killing have fled into safety among the thousands of people who have gathered in camps throughout the region. The majority of the people have been forced to rely on international aid to survive. The United Nations has been criticized for its lack of action in the Darfur crisis, and the United States has been accused of not doing enough. The United States has been one of the largest donors to the United Nations, but it has not been able to use its influence to persuade other nations to take action. The United Nations has been accused of not being responsive to the needs of the people in Darfur, and it has been criticized for its lack of a clear strategy for resolving the conflict.

Sittenfeld’s Prep is Perfectly Honest

by Emily Sittenfeld

Special occasions are a great reason to go out with a group of your friends and celebrate over a large meal. Rosie’s and Norm’s diners do not apply to the “special occasions” category when it comes to eating out. Such was the case with my friend’s 50th birthday. The kitchen, my family, because I am the only child, the small 5-grandma-sous-chef situation. Automagically converts a surprise birthday party with fifty of the person’s closest, friends, and co-workers.

... being the thoughtful daughter that I am, did not remember that my Dad’s birthday was approaching until days prior to the occasion. I am local, so it was my responsibility to plan the great feast with the few people she allows into her life, give a snapshot of her life, and every person with whom she comes into contact. Sittenfeld tells a coming-of-age story through Lee’s interactions with the few people she allows into her life, gives a snapshot of her life, and every person with whom she comes into contact. Sittenfeld tells a coming-of-age story through Lee’s interactions with the few people she allows into her life, gives a snapshot of her life, and every person with whom she comes into contact.

While the pink and green paperbag held on the cover may suggest prissy, this is not your typical story about a rich, Northeastern suburban student attending a prestigious private school, and the privileges one experiences by earning the highest-quality education. Instead, Curtis Sittenfeld’s Prep offers a “true” insider’s guide into life at a boarding school.

The book is divided into eight chapters, each representing a semester during Lee Fiona’s study at Ault, a fictional private school near Boston. Railing from South Bend, Indiana, Lee provides warm, intimate commentary about the stereotypical students at her school. Like a fish out of water, she initially perceives the stark contrast between herself and the rest of the school. Ault is filled with students who are so privileged that they do not need cash on campus, whereas Lee is on scholarship. This world, in which there are over-privileged kids with names like Aspeth, Horton, and Gats—

The PCPC report has been a foundation for significant recent initiatives at the College, most notably the proposal for a new Center for the Study of Race and Ethnicity. The commission also oversaw the College's organizational structure, and as a result the school is currently "turning ahead in the creation of a senior level position for diversity and multicultural affairs," according to Cruz-Saco. When the former Dean of the College, Frances Hoffmann, was promoted to become the Dean of the Faculty, President Fainstein asked Cruz-Saco to become the Interim Dean of the College.

The Dean of the College is one of the eight senior administrators just below President Fainstein, which also include the Dean of the Faculty, the Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid, the Vice-President of Information Services, the Vice-President of Administration, the Vice-President of College Relations, the Vice-President of Finance, and the Vice-President for Advancement. The Dean of the College is responsible to the President for the well-being of the student body, and specifically oversees the associate Deans, the dean of Freshmen, Disability Services, the Office of Student Life, Residential Life and Housing, Academic Affairs, Student Activities, Counseling Services, Health Services, CELS, Multicultural Center / Unity House, Religious and Spiritual Life, ONS, and the Writing Center. In addition to all the duties normally associated with the position, Dean Milstone commented that during her service as Interim Dean of the College, Cruz-Saco has also "worked tirelessly to create programs and support structures that most students' needs and bring various departments in the College into better, more integrated working relationships."

"Finalizing the architecture of the new campus of the College position with the multicultural aspect, as recommended by the PCPC, proved to be a significant task, which is why Cruz-Saco has worked hard in the position for two years," said Helen Regan, one of the original co-ordinaed by Fransiem. Cruz-Saco feels that in the two years as Interim Dean of the College, she has "made a lot of important work to develop the design and configuration for the diversity of the College that will help the school accomplish its mission. Cruz-Saco says that most of the initiatives to perfect the model are "done alone, and that they all require teamwork and seeking consensus."

"Dean of the College, Cruz-Saco has missed the on-to-one contact with students. The current school year was the first in her 20-year career in which she hasn't offered a course. However, she has continued her role to a faculty and independent study class and also means regularly with student leaders to "keep her ears close to the issues" and "generally stay in contact with the student body, especially through her participation in Senate meetings."

Cruz-Saco has mentioned that "through all of her efforts, students remain in the forefront of [Cruz-Saco's] abilities."

Dean Cruz-Saco feels that all her many experiences and positions on the Connecticut College campus, she is more proud of her identity as a faculty member and educator who is committed to the enterprise of learning. Although Dean Cruz-Saco was not actively seeking another job, she "knew all along that at some point she was going to be out of the market," and therefore could not resist the opportunity to take the position as Dean of the College at Wesleyan University when it presented itself. Her belief is that leaders have missions to accomplish, and for the her contributed greatly to Connecticut College and that the College community has influenced her as well. Therefore, though it was a difficult decision to leave the College, it is "time [for her] to move on" and bring her knowledge and leadership experience to another institution similar to Conn where she can contribute "fresh ideas." Cruz-Saco sees the move as a "great opportunity to take on another institution and infuse it with values and practices from Connecticut College." Although she will not teach her first year at Wesleyan, she will also hold the position of Visitor Scholar in the Economics department.

President Fainstein reminded the campus wide email that Dean Cruz-Saco's "enthusiasm, energy, and intellect will be sorely missed." Helen Regan also "extends her sincere thanks to Professor Cruz-Saco for her service to the College."

Dean Milstone expressed similar sentiments, stating that Dean Cruz-Saco has "symbolized the best of Connecticut College... Wesleyan University is fortunate to have the opportunity to welcome an outstanding individual." Cruz-Saco's "commitment to the College is the growth and development of all the students that she has taught," she noted. "Congratulations to our new President. We wish her success, and we will deeply miss her." Cruz-Saco believes that "leadership is healthy for institutions. She is "moving ahead in the creation of leadership that will bring various departments in the College into better, more integrated working relationships." Cruz-Saco also looks forward to working with her new colleagues at Wesleyan University, where she is "happy with the contributions and the ideals for academic excellence that she helped to implement."

The replacement process will involve a nationwide search for a permanent Dean of the College, expected to be completed by the fall 2006 semester. This replacement process will continue in tandem with the search for the President. In the meantime, the next school year will be a transitional one for the office of the Dean of the College; there will be an internal search for an Interim Dean to temporarily fill the position.

Interview with the world's worst college tour guide

Parent: So why are you guys called the camels?
Tour Guide: Are you kidding? What's on a camel's back? Hump lady! God, I hope your kid got the brains from your husband.

P: What's the drinking scene like?
TG: Well, I'm not "sober" right now. What does that tell you?

P: How's the food in the dining halls?
TG: Depends how you feel about cod...

P: Do you guys have a school newspaper?
TG: Um...I don't know.

P: How are the classes?
TG: I recommend taking Contemporary Issues in Sports. They play kickball!

P: What's your favorite thing about Conn?
TG: Bearmmerged! Woo hoo!

Camel Close-Up

Isn't this one of the loveliest camel close-ups of the year? I certainly think so. You'll "tap" into your deepest imagination to figure out what this is. Maybe if you "hang" out with some of the administration here you'll figure it out. Either that or look very closely at page 1. Very, very closely...

Camel Curiosity

A well-treated and well-fed camel can produce 10 gallons of milk a day, which is as much as Holstein cows produce. http://www.foodreference.com/html/fcamels.html

P.S. How weird does that sound? Class of 2009?

Senior Jeremy Moore - "Seduce your Governor"
Sophomore Brenna Muller and Candace Young-Fields "Don't pop your collar!"
Junior Brian Doigan - "Get a fake ID."
Freshman Kerrey McKenna - "Always come to THEs one hour later then advertised"

Schwartz Named Camel Of The Week

By Strategic Team

It is no surprise to those who follow Conn men’s track and field that Dave Schwartz is this week’s Camel of the Week, after earning 14 points for the first time in his career. Schwartz tallied four goals in a 5-1 home win over Wesleyan University, setting the game winner with just under a minute to play. On Saturday, he scored a second goal of an easy Bates College in the fifth overtime, helping the Camels to an 11-7 win.

The Wesleyan game, played on a windy afternoon, was the decisive event of the season for both teams. Middlebury, which had already clinched its NESCAC title, came into the game with a 17-1 record and was looking to improve on its mark and win the league. The Cardinals, on the other hand, were looking to maintain their hold on the second place in the league standings, with a win against Trinity improving their chances of making the playoffs. Middlebury was ranked #1 in the nation and was playing for its fourth straight title, while Middlebury was ranked #2 and was looking to make a statement in its senior season.

The game was a back-and-forth affair, with both teams putting up strong performances. Middlebury scored the first goal of the game on a penalty shot, but Middlebury quickly responded with a penalty goal of their own. The two teams then went on to score three more goals each, before Middlebury took a 6-4 lead into halftime. In the second half, Middlebury extended its lead to 9-6 on a goal by Logan '08, but Middlebury was not able to put the game out of reach, as Middlebury played its best in the final minutes of the game. Middlebury scored three goals in the final minutes of the game, including an empty-net goal by Logan '08, to win the game 12-8.

The Cardinals were able to grind out their win, despite being outplayed in much of the game. Middlebury had more shots and more possessions, but Middlebury was able to capitalize on its opportunities and close out the game strong. Middlebury was able to get the last two goals of the game, including the empty-net goal, to secure the victory.

The Cardinals were unable to score on the power play, despite having a two-man advantage for over two minutes. Middlebury was also able to capitalize on its opportunities, including a goal by Logan '08, which gave Middlebury a 9-6 lead with just over 10 minutes left in the game. Middlebury was able to hold on to its lead, and was able to secure the victory in the final minutes of the game.

Middlebury's win was the deciding factor in the NESCAC standings, as Middlebury finished the season with a 17-1 record and a perfect 3-0 record in NESCAC play. Middlebury was able to claim its fourth straight NESCAC title, and was able to cement its position as the dominant team in the league. Middlebury's win was also the deciding factor in the NESCAC tournament, as Middlebury was able to secure the top seed and a bye into the semifinals. Middlebury's win was a huge victory for the Cardinals, who were looking to make a statement in their senior season. Middlebury's win was also a huge victory for the NESCAC, as Middlebury was able to claim its fourth straight NESCAC title, and was able to cement its position as the dominant team in the league.
