Trustees Vote to 'Cap' Investment in South Africa

Board OptS In Favor Of More Extensive Research

by Lisa M. Allegretto

The Board of Trustees at Connecticut College voted Saturday, May 7, to put a "cap" on the College's investments in South Africa.

The new policy says that Connecticut College "will make no new purchases of stocks in companies doing business in South Africa and may continue to hold stocks presently in its portfolio only in those companies that are rated Category I according to the Sullivan Principles."

"This policy is a compromise or alternative to the different views of the board," said President Ames. "The board was very much affected by the meeting with the students on Friday."

According to Alls new policy will provide the possibility for a gradual total divestment.

Another aim of the new investment policy is strengthening the research done concerning companies the College currently invests in. The trustees intend to make the College a full member of the Investor Responsibility Research Center. This will enable the board to know whether the company the College has invested in are selling goods or services to the govern-

Tolliver Proposes Formation Of Women's Support Group at Connecticut College

by Liz Michalki
The College Voice

Next year, women at Connecticut College may have the support of a group designed solely for them. This group would bring strong female role models on campus to speak. It would also serve as a forum for women to discuss issues concerning women, and as a place where women leaders on campus could find support.

"The purpose of this group would not be to pull men back, but to pull women up," said Joseph Tolliver, Dean of Student Life. Tolliver became interested in the formation of a women's group though the urging of several female administrators and students. He is presently conducting a study of women leaders at Conn since the campus went co-educational. We want to create an environment in which male and female leaders can grow.

An article in the New York Times by Susan Dicenhouse re- sent some representatives from a study done by Russel Sage Connecticut.

Tolliver has found this to be true so far in his study. "I think it's a great idea, something that we need at Conn to promote female leaders in all areas, not just SGA," said Carla Munroe, public relations officer.

The National Conference for College Women Student Leaders will take place at The George Washington University this year, from June 2-4. Tolliver is hoping to send some representatives from Connecticut.

Students and Faculty Rally for Divestment

by Lisa M. Allegretto
News Editor

On Friday, May 6 approximately 150 Connecticut College students and faculty members gathered outside Blaustein for a rally in support of total divestment of the remaining $1.9 million in College holdings in South Africa. The rally coincided with the Board of Trustee's meeting.

The rally had originally been planned as a 24 hour sit-in earlier in the week. "We didn't feel that there was enough support for a 24 hour sit-in," said Blair Taylor, Vice President of SGA and co-coordinator of the rally.

According to Taylor the student referendum vote in support of total divestment was not considered as valid support by the board of trustees.

Britta McNemar, Chairwoman of the College Voice, said "I feel that we should make the rally larger than the board of trustees. We appreciate and hear what you are saying," said MacNamara, "Your events are not going unnoticed."

Donald Peppard, Professor of economics, called the issue "simple. "Do we want to be associated with South Africa or not?"

We know that it will not help South Africa. It is what is right for us. "Connecticut College has to act in accord with its total conscience," said Fr. Larry LaPointe, who was wearing a red sweater to show his support.

Students Meet with Student-Trustee Liaison

Committee to Discuss the Divestment Issue

by Lisa M. Allegretto
News Editor

Following the divestment rally on Friday, the crowd moved to Conn Cave to attend the Trustee Student Liaison Committee meeting. The discussion then focused on the issue of total divestment vs. continued selective divestment. Jay Levi, a trustee and graduate of Connecticut College, supported total divestment. He reminded the student body that the divestment issue has been a long standing concern with the board of trustees and that Connecticut College set a policy for investing in South Africa before many other colleges.

At the end of the meeting petitions with 400 signatures stating community support for divestment were given to the trustees.
What Public Image is Connecticut College Pursuing?

Did you hear about the two freshmen who broke the world record for consecutive hours of throwing a frisbee? They raised approximately $1600 for Big Brothers/Big Sisters in pledges. In the media, it brought great attention to Connecticut College—not necessarily the kind we should be seeking.

What those two freshmen did was for a noble cause, but was the charity money they raised accomplished relatively by admirable means? Certainly, no one was hurt, but to what end does such image of the College as an institution of learning suffer? What image is the College, its students, faculty and staff pursuing?

Our goal is further the image of Connecticut College/Country Club: where members frolic upon the hills covered with flowing green grass and merely bask under the warm sun, plenty of free time to shoot a few holes on the golf course and scout down to the beach in the Saab, spending five days in the week breaking a world record. Perhaps we wish to perpetuate the myth that our parent’s hard earned dollars help to partially fund enough activities on our campus to completely mask all students’ local and global concerns. “Live in a state of bliss, and catch a class or two in the meantime,” could be the new College motto.

Granted, this is somewhat hyperbolic, but with a little help from the local media, this “ideal” image could be ours. While it’s true that Channel 8 is not likely to send a helicopter to the campus to film students frenetically working, students studying, the do without the petty sensationalism? Connecticut College is, after all, supposedly a school.

Perhaps both students and faculty have lost sight or respect for a serious learning environment. Every day does not have to be a party; this College should not be, nor perpetuate, a year-round summer camp atmosphere. Yet, this belief does exist. A little fun is great, but we are here to learn and mature, not play all day and embalm ourselves at night.

Again, those two freshmen accomplished a service and, in that respect, are to be commended. But is, simultaneously, was the kind of effort to degrade the holistic portrait of this institution, substituting only ephemeral, petty glory.

CONTHOUGHT
The Similarities of Two Worlds
by David Grann

I boarded the bus slowly, trying to squeeze my way through the other passengers in order to find an empty seat. The bus began to stir as the driver slid the clutch downward, and I plopped myself down in the backseat. Lodged between my legs was a woman, I set out on the seven hour journey to Boruca, a indigenous community isolated in the Talamanca mountains between Panama and Costa Rica.

The bus wound through valleys and peaks, coffee fields and banana plantations, villages and empty countryside. After the fifth hour, I disembarked at a remote depot, occupied only by a dark-skinned priest, a lady with her child, and a few wandering chickens. Following the advice of the priest, I climbed aboard the back of a disassembled pick-up truck. The child, dragged by his mother, followed suit. Soon a man, wearing a sombrero and carrying a sack of seeds flung over his back, was melody tuned in a sheath, approached us. He collected one-fourth of an American dollar, entered the driver's seat, and quickly sped off.

The trip continued, encountering myriad of villages, where men and women, wearing sombreros, wandered about; women, carrying baskets of soiled clothes, walked towards the village's only source of water; and where children, dressed in worn out pants, bikes, sandals, and sombreros, wandered through the thick mud with heavy sacks of seeds flung over their shoulders.

After two hours of such scenes we finally arrived at Boruca. The village sat in the center of surrounding mountain tops. Small shacks and tiny plots of land dotted the area. I gladly departed from the truck, and walked in the direction of my new temporary dwelling.

I repeated the same routine several times until fatigue finally kept me from moving about for several days from returning to the farm. During that time I stayed around the house, amusing myself with the abundance of kids to play with. Those days were paradoxically some of my happiest and saddest. With the children I always felt some strange, inexplicable sense of peace. Their youthful spirit, incessant enthusiasm and unrelenting love of life continually filled me with an overwhelming feeling of being alive. Yet I could not help but wonder what their lives would be like ten years from now? When their clothes were no longer prince's costumes, their play worlds necc longer realities, and their bodies no longer possible? Where will they be once their hair was no longer kings, the bugs around them no longer friends. Such thoughts left me hollow inside—a sensation that remained with me until my departure, three weeks later.

I started down a path that lead to a series of huts, I was met by nine children barely the age of seven who screamed and tugged at my hand. I was guided to the home of Dona Dolores, the name given to me by an anthropologist from San Juan. I was then released for the next few weeks.

In Boruca I lived as I had never done before. I sponsored a mache (although very clumsily), worked on a farm that was two hours by foot from the central village, spent five to seven hours cultivating each day, and returned each evening by the same foot path to the house of Dona Dolores. There I received a plate of rice and beans, and then drifted off to sleep in the same confines as Dona Dolores, her children and her grandchildren.

I would like to begin with an observation that I am sure some of you must have made. A consider...
Donor Dialogue: Development of the Secretary of the College

by Victoria Olsen
The College Voice

It is time to illuminate what the title "Secretary of the College" really means. Jane Bredeson is our Secretary of the College. Though many students know the name, the majority are unaware of her role, and only feel its effects.

Bredeson’s responsibilities range from planning special events, to promoting the college, to acting as a spokesperson who oversees many school and community networks. This may sound impressive already, but a further understanding will show that Bredeson might be in the tenth crunch time of anybody.

All of the seniors who are anticipating May 27, might, but probably don’t know that it is Bredeson who is putting together graduation commencement. Or take for instance the monumental topic of our college’s President, Bredeson is the powerhouse and trouble shooter coordinating the upcoming Gala event in honor of President Ames. (Whom she lauds, “Ames has done a tremendous amount for the college in his fourteen years). Bredeson is then also responsible for the October inauguration of President Guardians. (With regard to the change in leadership, Bredeson described Guardiani, “She is an exciting, interesting person with different strengths and lots of new ideas for ways to promote the College.”) And while students may be tanning in the summer sun, Bredeson will be masterminding an entire series of conferences and campus activities. These are to generate income for the school, and bring esteemed visitors to the area which will benefit the New London community at large.

Though her schedule is hectic, it is one she enjoys. In her twenty-two years here, she is “still excited by the challenges and the fast paced changes in the role(s) of being secretary of the college.” Bredeson is originally from the midwest, and grew up in Evanston, Illinois. She graduated Grinnell with a BA in American Literature — the field that her husband would teach at Connecticut College. After a two year stint in the “windy city” Chicago, she decided to move in Pennsylvania. (Whom she lauds, “Ames has done a tremendous amount for the college in his fourteen years). Directed Class Stages One-Act Plays

by John Zuckerman

On the nights of May 2nd and 4th, the Theatre Department’s directing class staged a series of six one-act plays in Palmer 202. Each member of the class was required to stage a play of their choosing, and what we saw was the culmination of a semester’s effort.

The plays produced on Monday night were A Good Time, directed by Jaime Arze, Lovers and Other Strangers, directed by Michael Lenten, and The Actor’s Nightmare, directed by Lexi Robertson. These one-act plays each lasted around forty-five minutes, and combined humor with a serious statement about the lives of the characters. In A Good Time, Mandy Morgan, played by Dudley Kenney, is an updated Audrey Hepburn, as seen in Breakfast at Tiffany’s. She comes to terms with her value system after a laid back cop from Columbia shows up at her apartment in New York looking for the “good time” she promised him when he agreed to sign a ticket for going 68 in a 55. They differ in their conceptions of what a “good time” is, and they finally reach an understanding of what they are. The actors play off of a nervous energy that fits well with the play, as each character tries to come with the guitarist.

On Wednesday night the three plays that were produced were Food for Love, directed by Bruce Marchand, Bad Bad John, directed by Ethan Allerhe, and Actors, directed by Mark Kahn. These plays had a more serious note than those on Monday night, and the subject matter was very tense and uncomfortable. In Food for Love, Jaime Arze plays a rough, independent truck driver who has tracked down his long lost half sister, who is played by Sheila Davis. The play confronts the conflicting desires of the characters of the characters as they struggle to come to terms with themselves and each other.

These one act plays show the strength of the Theatre Department, and the tremendous effort that went into producing these plays. Two of these plays, A Good Time and Food for Love are to be shown on May 9 to twenty two playwrights who are attending a workshop at the National Theatre Institute.

The New London School Board debates over $278,000 in this school year’s budget. This surplus, according to the board president, could either be returned to the city or be used for school equipment needed next year.

“IT’s the board’s decision,” said Board President Arline P. Krug. “If the majority of board members vote to retain the leftover funds, they will be used to buy supplies and repair equipment.”

In early April, over $1 million was slashed from the Board of Education’s original $16.4 million budget request by the New London City Council. Councilors later restored $300,000 to the proposal. School officials and parents, however, have lobbied for more restorations, claiming that staff layoffs and program cuts would be the result of such a cut.

Last year, the council and the school board debated over which agency should receive the $140,000 surplus from that year’s education budget. The two agencies eventually resolved to split the money evenly.

Board President Krug felt the board should retain all surplus funds. “If we give it back to the council, we don’t know what they do with it,” said Krug. “I think it should be used to ensure that positions and programs don’t get cut, especially after the council’s recent budget cuts.”

Stephen R. Smith, a councilor and former school board member, also felt, in light of the recent budget request cut, that the board should retain the surplus funds. “If the board had a good year and ended up overshooting their expenditures, then I feel they should spend the extra allocations for their needs,” said Smith. “Given the most recent cut of the fall budget requests, I feel the most wise and most prudent way to spend the available funds this year is in anticipation of a reduced budget next year,” said Smith. “In other words, the board should spend this money on such basic necessities as furniture, supplies and equipment repair.”

Smith added that this “surplus” is a result of good business management. “In any large organization, the Board of Education included, you write a budget in which you give your best cost estimates in a variety of different line items. Some of the cost of these items is predictable; some varies greatly,” said Smith. “Towards the end of the year, you usually have to make some adjustments. If you come within, say 2% of your expected expenditures, you’ve done a good job,” said Smith. “This ‘surplus’, therefore, is normal, good management.”

Guido Calabresi, Sterling Professor of Law at Yale University and Dean of Yale Law School, has been selected as this year's commencement speaker.

Connecticut College will award Calabresi an honorary Doctor of Law degree at the ceremony. In 1962 he was chosen one the Ten Outstanding Young Men in America by the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce. Time magazine listed Calabresi as one of the ten most influential law teachers in the country in 1974.

Calabresi graduated from Yale in 1953 with a B.S. in analytical economics. He went on to attend Magdalen College, Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar.

His other books include A Common Law for the Age of Statues, Tragic Choices and Ideals, Beliefs, Attitudes and the Law: Private Perspectives on a Public Law.

The Cost of Accounts, his critical account of the fault-insurance system, was a major influence on state legislatures throughout the country in their efforts to establish no-fault accident insurance.

Calabresi has served as a consultant to the U.S. Department of Transportation and to the New York State Insurance Department. In 1962 he was chosen one the Ten Outstanding Young Men in America by the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce. Trustees Vote Against Further Investment In South Africa

The new investment policy was brought to the College community leaders in a meeting on Saturday afternoon. Members of SGA, SOAR, UMOJA and La Unidad attended the meeting.

According to Sam Seder, President of SGA, the atmosphere of the meeting was calm and few questions were asked.

"Everyone was disappointed," said Seder. "but there wasn't anything we could do about it."

Students Protesting Banning of Alcohol on Four College Campuses

(CPS) - In the midst of what has been the most political, confrontational spring on U.S. campuses in years, students at Colorado State University, the universities of Massachusetts and Oregon, and Cornell College in Iowa vociferously protested new crackdowns on student drinking.

University of Massachusetts students - who have turned the Amherst campus into perhaps the most politically active in the land with big protests against the Central Intelligence Agency recruiting, apartheid and racism in recent months, held their biggest gathering of the year April 13 to object to a new ban on alcohol at outdoor events.

Nearly 1,000 UMass students rallied, making it the largest demonstration of the year at the campus, university spokesman Jeanne Hopkins said.

Last weekend, several Colorado State University members complained to the Fort Collins, CO, city council April 20 that local police - hoping to prevent another alcohol-fueled riot like last April's "College Days" spring party - have used excessive force in stopping student drinking parties recently.

Similarly, University of Oregon officials ordered a beer blowout April 18 by immediately banning beer kegs at fraternity and sorority parties.

Advance word of a proposed ban on alcohol, Oregon vice president for student Affairs Gerald Mosley said, prompted some students talk about "closing the streets...for one last big party," but the event never gelled.

Campus administrators are trying, to discourage student drinking in other ways, too.

At the University of Maine at Orono, Professor George Narkowsky has proposed training drinking references from the school song, which urges singers to "fill your steins to dear old Maine...drink a toast once again."

"I respect you right to go drink your heads off. But the university shouldn't encourage it," Narkowsky explained. He would like to forget the toast, and replace references to "Maine men" with "Maine grads."

An as-yet-unnamed committee will soon consider Narkowsky's suggestions, but there are strong feelings on both sides of the issue.

Noting that singer Rudy Vallee made "The Maine Stein Song," a hit during the 1930s, student Tom Caufield said, "It's only the school fight song ever to make the Top 40." He called the proposal "stupid."

At Massachusetts, student protesters chanted "Give beer a chance" and "Joe's gotta go" while carrying beer cans to protest Chancellor Joseph Duffy's decision to ban alcohol. Hopkins said the demonstration was orderly, but probably wouldn't change Duffy's mind about the ban.

The ban at Oregon prohibits bulk beer purchases, defined as ones made by more than three students who pool their money to buy alcoholic beverages. Mosley said the school has asked Greek houses to not serve alcohol to students under age 21, but those efforts have not worked.

At Cornell College, officials banned alcohol from Alumni Gym for an indefinite period in response to reports that 33 minors tried to buy beer at alumni parties March 11 and 12.

University of Utah President Wants His Toy Cap Gun Back

(CPS) - University of Utah President Chase Peterson wants his cap gun back.

Peterson, whose father Elmer George Peterson served as president of Utah State University during the 1930s, placed the toy in a safe place fifty years ago. In 1938, when Peterson was eight years old, the gun - Peterson's most prized possession at the time - was stolen with other memorabilia in a time capsule in the cornerstone of Utah State's Old Main building.

But when Utah State officials opened the time capsule earlier this month in conjunction with USU's 100th anniversary, Peterson's gun wasn't there.

"There wasn't a cap gun in the items we took out of the cornerstone," said Utah State Vice President for University Relations William Lye. "I have no idea where it could have been."

"At that time of my life," recalls Peterson, "it was my greatest possession."

Peterson says he distinctly remembers the 1938 cornerstone ceremony, and is sure the gun was among the items placed in the time capsule. But although Lye reports a letter from then-President Franklin Roosevelt, overdue book notices, and student identification cards were retrieved, "there weren't any cap guns."

When Coach Ed Mighten returned from the NESCAC Men's Track & Field Championships held at Williams College last Saturday (4/30), disappointment clouded his thoughts. With 18 points, the CONN team finished last behind the other 10 NESCAC schools, as powerhouse Trinity and Bates placed first (116 points) and second (100 points), respectively.

However, reflecting upon the meet some hours later, Mighten realized that he must put things into perspective. Although the team "came up a little short of expectations," he had to be happy with all of the improvements the team had demonstrated throughout the entire season. "They [the improvements] are not always easy to see when you finish last," Mighten said. "We faced some pretty stiff competition, and scored 18 points more than last year."

Four team members contributed to the CONN score. Hal Pratt, '89, placed second in the 400 meter run (50.88), and third in the 200 meter dash (23.27). Scott Cane, '91, placed fourth in the high jump with a mark of 1.8 meters, while teammate Ed Hewson, '89, placed sixth in the triple jump with a mark of 11.74 meters. Both Pratt and Hewson qualified for the New England Championships. Pratt will compete in the 200 meter run, in which he is ranked fifth, Hewson will participate in the decathlon event, with a seventh-place ranking. The 4x400 meter relay team of Andrew Donaldson, '90; Ted Liang, '89; Leon Dunkin, '90; and Pratt, failed to place, but managed to break the old CONN record by a total of 1.5 seconds, clocking in at 3:32.7. The Camels finished with an overall record of 22-22, a mark that "could be a turning point in the season," Mighten said. "There were more highs than lows this season," Mighten said. "The season has been a success." Mighten views as "encouraging." "There were more highs than lows this season," Mighten said. "The men's track and field team have been playing at a fast rate, and track has the potential to be a real big sport at CONN," Mighten continued. "I think the men have a lot of satisfaction from being the coach, and I can only anticipate good things for the future."

Intramural Update

The 1988 intramural season ends this week with playoffs in softball, baseball, basketball, and indoor soccer.

SOFTBALL: The championship game will pit the Biking Tree Sliders against the Brewers. Both teams were undefeated in the regular season, capturing the National League and American League titles respectively over the weekend.

The Biking Tree Sliders eliminated the Nads and BFD in the first round. The Brewers beat the Grad/Adv. Students and the Lanny's to make it to the championship game.

Men's Crew Takes Three Out of Four from Rivals

by Nick Roosevelt

The Connecticut College Men's Crew Team raced against rivals Wesleyan and Trinity last Saturday (4/30). CONN came out the victor in three out of four races.

The Freshman Heavy 8 (Eric Freeman, Paul McDaniel, Mike Mahoney, Nat Cabot, Rob Weaver, Evan Lewis, Geoff Anderson, '90, Dave Allen, and cox, Kristin Nani) lost to Wesleyan for its final loss against freshman competition.

The current was running wild, which made the race very fast, at least 30 seconds faster than normal.

The Freshman rowed aggressively, taking an early lead. Wesleyan two years ago and qualified behind. CONN tried to move back, but the race was over before CONN was back on the water.

According to Coach Bob Gillette, "the Fresh 8 did not race well given the conditions."

The Novice 4 (freshmen John Zobol, Bill Betteman, Drew Middleton, and sophomores Rob Ankur, and cox Tammy Keunz) continued its winning ways by beating its counterparts handily.

"They [the Novice 4] have established themselves as one of the top contenders for the upcoming New England Open [in their event]," Gillette said.

The Heavy 8 (Chris Young, '88; Ted Wilga, '88; Dave Ewing, '89; Weaver; Anderson; Allen; Spencer Knight, '88; Nick Roosevelt, '88; and cox Vic DiGravio, '88) raced in the JV race and won by open water in a time of 5:21, beating Wesleyan by five seconds and Trinity by six seconds.

According to Gillette, unlike the freshmen, the Heavy 8 "adapted well to the fast conditions, rowing a slightly faster pace than normal in the first half of the race and then just held the other crews off to the end."

The Lightweight 8 (Keith Walker, '91; John Hughes, '88; Jeff Sweeney; Rusty Lane, '86; Don Tower; Steve Peterson; Eric Giloller, '90; Fran Ryan, '88; and cox Kristin Lofblad, '90) consisted of CONN's Light- weight 4 and four rowers from a Connecticut College crew in the summer, including alumnus Lane.

This boat trumped the previously unbeaten Trinity Light 8, clocking the fastest time of the day, 5:15.

"The [Lightweight 8] were the sharpest looking crew there," Gillette said.

The two Varsity 4's did not race this week, due to a lack of entries from the other schools.

The last races of the season will take place on the Schuylkill river in Philadelphia at the Dad Vail National Championships on May 13 and 14. This exciting event will feature more than 70 schools, rowing every five to 10 minutes all day; and the crew looks forward to strong fan support from CONN students.

The Connecticut College Women's Track and Field Team ended the season on a positive note. Three of their four track teams competed at the NESCAC Championships, qualified four more people for ECAC Championships, broke five team records, and set 12 personal bests.

"They [the Novice 4] have established themselves as one of the top contenders for the upcoming New England Open [in their event]," Gillette said.

The Heavy 8 (Chris Young, '88; Ted Wilga, '88; Dave Ewing, '89; Weaver; Anderson; Allen; Spencer Knight, '88; Nick Roosevelt, '88; and cox Vic DiGravio, '88) raced in the JV race and won by open water in a time of 5:21, beating Wesleyan by five seconds and Trinity by six seconds.

According to Gillette, unlike the freshmen, the Heavy 8 "adapted well to the fast conditions, rowing a slightly faster pace than normal in the first half of the race and then just held the other crews off to the end."

The Lightweight 8 (Keith Walker, '91; John Hughes, '88; Jeff Sweeney; Rusty Lane, '86; Don Tower; Steve Peterson; Eric Giloller, '90; Fran Ryan, '88; and cox Kristin Lofblad, '90) consisted of CONN's Light- weight 4 and four rowers from a Connecticut College crew in the summer, including alumnus Lane.

"We talked about running every pace," Coach Ned Bishop said. "With very few throwers at CONN, however, did not bounce back for last Tuesday's make up game at Smith. The Camels dropped their final game 6-5. "We weren't really in the game," Campbell said. "We were just having fun." Coach Larrabee was impressed with her performance. "It's quite rare that a defensive player performs so well in the first half of a game," Bishop said. "She is two seconds ." Campbell's turn around was comparable to the CONN record set last year. "It doesn't show anything." The credit goes to each and every team member. They were great to work with and I think that they got a lot out of it." Campbell said that the J.V. program is a real "feeder system," and that seven of this season's starters were members of the J.V. team in the past.

Parmenter added that there will be a one credit coursework offered by the physical education department this coming fall, for those beginners who want a head start in learning new skills.

Sailing Team Captures the New England Dinghy Championship

by Jonathan S. Pudney
The College Voice

The Connecticut College Varsity Sailing Team captured the New England Dinghy Championship last weekend (4/30-5/1), winning the Coast Guard Alumni Bowl for the first time in the eight-year history of the CONN sailing program.

Last year, the Camel sailors finished second in the same event, seven points behind Harvard, but this year CONN extracted full vengeance. CONN finished 28 points ahead of second place U.R.I., the top ranked team in the nation.

Boston University and Dartmouth finished third and fourth respectively, both over 60 points behind CONN; while Harvard took ninth, 110 points behind the winners.

Sailing for CONN in "A" division were seniors Jonathan Judney and Pam Vandelinde, who tied for second, but dropped to third on the leaderboard. Seniors Peter Johnstone and Rebecca Roggemann dominated "B" division, to get the lowest point total for the regatta and take first place in their division.

Out of a possible 28 first places, the CONN sailors got 11. The top four teams qualify for the National Championships, which will be held at Stanford University in June.

First-year Coach Tom Merola was very pleased with his team's performance.

"Qualifying for the Nationals was our main goal," Merola said, "but these guys were really pumped; they just seemed determined to win."

During last weekend's regatta, all the teams were asked to vote on the top 10 skippers, and the top three crews in New England. For the second straight year, Roggemann was selected as an All-New England crew.

Johnstone was voted second of this year's New England skippers, while Pudney was awarded fourth. The recognition that these individual sailors received reflects the overall position that the entire CONN sailing team has as one of New England's finest squads.

This year marks the high point of CONN's sailing program to date. During this season, the team won the New England Sloop Championships, the Fall New England Dinghy Championships, and last weekend's New England title.

"The 13 seniors on the team have certainly laid the foundation for continued success. Next year, the graduating seniors will be replaced by a talented group of sophomores and juniors."

But first, this year's varsity team has one last chance to stamp its authority on the college sailing scene, at the 1988 Nationals.

ELIZABETH McCULLOUGH, '88, of the women's tennis and lacrosse teams; and NICK ROOSEVELT, '88, of the men's crew team, were named this year's Brown-Brooks Award winners.

The award honors a senior male and female who best represent their class in scholarship, leadership, and sportsmanship.

"I'm very happy to receive the award," Roosevelt said. "When I was only a freshman, I was impressed that the College had the award, but I never dreamed of getting it."

McCullough was also pleased with the honor.

"It's nice to have an award like this," she said. "[The award] is very reflective of a school that values a balance between athletics and scholastics."

The committee who selects the winners of this award is comprised of the Dean of the College, the Athletic Director, and the President of the Senior Class.

According to Sports Information Director Kathy Smith, the award is named for the first award recipients, Tommy Brown and Jim Brooks, both members of the class of 1984.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK: This week's honors go to seniors PETER JOHNSTONE and REBECCA ROGGRMANN, who led the CONN Sailing Team to the New England Dinghy Championship last weekend (4/30-5/1).

Johnstone and Roggemann captured first place in the "B" division, accumulating the lowest point total for the regatta.

Roggemann was voted an All New England crew for the second year in a row.

Johnstone finished second in the balloting for the Top Ten New England skippers, while teammate JONATHON PUDEY, '88, ranked fourth in the voting.

Women's Crew Team Makes Most out of Poor Conditions

by Marc LaPierre
The College Voice

Though the Connecticut College Women's Crew Team has some impressive performances at last Saturday's (4/30) regatta against Wesleyan and Trinity, Coach Chuck Wolter termed the event a "wasted weekend."

"It was an unfair race course," Wolter said. The Connecticut River in Middletown. "There was a very strong current, which made the conditions very questionable."

Both CONN's Lightweight 4 and Heavyweight 4 made the most of the poor circumstances, finishing one and two respectively in the Varsity 4 competition.

"The Lightweight 4 continues to be very successful," Wolter said, "while the Heavyweight 4 is slowly getting its stride."

According to Wolter, the Freshmen 8 "took another step up from last week," as they finished second to Trinity in their race.

"They [the Freshmen 8] keep surprising me," Wolter said. "They keep getting better."

The Camel will compete at the Dad Vails this weekend, where Wolter expects CONN's Lightweight and Heavyweight 4's to advance to the finals.

Men's Lax Downs Nichols, U. New Haven

by Jim Brown and Jeff Dorfman
The College Voice

With a pair of victories this past week, the Connecticut College Men's Lacrosse Team upped its record to 4-5. CONN surpassed Nichols 25-1 last Saturday (4/30), and last Wednesday, the Camels extended their winning streak to three games by defeating the University of New Haven, 14-7.

"There is no doubt about the outcome versus Nichols, the game against New Haven proved to be more difficult. After one period, CONN trailed 2-1. The Camels rallied, however, to go ahead 5-3 by halftime."

Early in the third quarter with the score 6-4, CONN iced the game with three goals. In this key sequence, Gately assisted twice, both times feeding Delux. Worrall then tallied to make the score 9-4.

"Gately is a tremendous feedman," Shields said. "He has a sense for who is open for a shot."

In the fourth quarter, CONN continued to pressure New Haven, outscoring them 6-3 in this stanza to make the final score 14-7.

Jay Ackerman, '89, again had a fine game for the Camels. Ackerman won 13 of 15 face-offs, and had two goals.

CONN received strong defensive performances from sophomores Eric Fillier and Tim Pegem (10 ground balls).

Senior Larry Goldstein was stellar in goal for the Camels, garnering 18 saves.

Two things are at stake as the Camels look towards their last two games. With 11 more points, Gately would set the freshmen scoring record. By beating Bates (5/5) and Williams (5/10), CONN would finish over .500, with a respectable 6-5 mark.
