SOPHOMORES LAY DOWN STRICT RULES FOR FRESHMEN

"We are the Sophomores and we'll tolerate no nonsense from the Freshmen!" Thus announced the class of '32, in mournful tones, as the hour of Freshman Initiation finally arrived last Tuesday evening. Following this encouraging dirge, the class of '33, came slowly up the stairs, filing backwards across the gymnasium and around the room.

When they were finally seated, Peggy Slater, sophomore class president, lost no time in making clear to them just what was expected and demanded of them by the class of '32. In stern, unhesitating, and unsympathetic manner she laid down for them the following rules and regulations:

Absolute Obedience at all Times

Regulation uniform worn at all times between the hours of seven in the morning and five forty-five in the afternoon, consisting of black cotton stockings, absolutely no jewelry or cosmetics, shoes with flat heels, green caps, scarfs, and horn rimmed glasses, and hair in braids.

Walk in single file on the right hand side of the walk or road.

Observe and follow the directions for ascending and descending the stairs in New London Hall.

Courtsey when spoken to by an upperclassman.

Bow to the sophomore banner upon entering New London Hall, and in leaving the building always leave facing the banner.

Rear door of New London Hall not to be used by Freshmen. Be prompt with a funny joke to be told when requested.

Have matches ready for convenience of upperclassmen in the tea house.

Stand back until all sophomores have entered the off-campus dining hall.

Following the announcement of these rules, the freshmen were called in groups of ten or twelve to the platform. They ascended the steps in various ways, and upon reaching the platform were decked out in the required regalia, and many of them were ordered to perform stunts. One freshman who had been seen chewing a blade of grass was ordered to "eat like a horse" and managed to dispose of a good handful of fresh grass. Others were made to sing, dance, hop, perform as acrobats and otherwise provide entertainment for the upperclassmen.

Initiation is to continue until Saturday at 5.40 at which time the freshmen will assemble in front of the gym to sing to the sophomores.

To The Students of Connecticut College

I do not believe you can quite realize with what satisfaction and pleasure I am starting my work with you. My two weeks here have shown me much of the greatness of the college and the chances for further development.

As I said at the first assembly, I am counting on assistance from you. I want opinions on a wide variety of college problems from all of you who have opinions. I am planning soon to arrange for interviews with your elected leaders and your leaders in scholarship—one and the same student of course in many cases but not in all—and with any who may have ideas of interest. Please be considering points which you wish to bring to my attention.

Best wishes to all of you, and the college as a whole, for a thoroughly satisfactory year.

KATHARINE BLUNT,
President.

SILVER BAY

Almost everyone has been to some sort of a conference or convention, so there's no point in describing the daily routine—"We awakened at 7.00 to the merry sound of the chapel bell. 7:30 found us chatting gaily over our morning coffee," etc. All conferences are more or less alike. Silver Bay is not much different in its outward routine. And yet there is some subtle difference in it that makes it a unique experience for everyone who goes there.

Perhaps it was magnificent Lake George, with its freaky blue and gray moods, in its setting of pines and rolling hills. Perhaps it was the magic scent of hemlocks on the clear air. Perhaps it was just the charm of the crowd of interesting people. But from the moment when we stepped off the boat, feeling like Freshmen all over again in that horde of strangers, Silver Bay was a delightful experience that can never be repeated anywhere again.

For one thing, nothing was compulsory. Except for arriving promptly for meals, when a stern-eyed guard looked us over for our identification buttons, we did as we chose. Everyone chose to do the things that we were expected to do, so it was all right. We wandered from one class to another, pausing between to discuss what we had just heard. We swam, rowed, played tennis all afternoon. There were few formal lectures. The discussions were along intensely interesting lines, such as Negro and White relations, the World Community, and practical religious questions—What can we believe? etc. Most of the discussion hours degenerated into good old-fashioned "bull sessions," but bull sessions guided by a masterly hand that led us into hitherto undiscovered lines of thought. There was a general relaxed, unself-conscious atmosphere that made you enter in whole-heartedly.

And the last night, when we marched down to the Lake and set our tiny candles in the water, while we sang "Follow the Gleam," was the most impressive part of it all. The stars overhead, the hundreds of tiny candles dancing on the water made a picture that now, months later, is an unforgettable symbol of Silver Bay.

JUNIOR MONTH

This past summer saw the thirteenth year of Junior Month carried on in New York City under the auspices of the Charity Organization Society of New York. Thirteen girls from thirteen leading women's colleges spent a month together in New York using the tenements for textbooks and the sidewalks of New York for a campus. We were given for our curriculum such studies as child welfare, health, housing, Medical Social Service, immigration, labor problems, and juvenile delinquency. It was a course in practical sociology, for we not only studied these various phases of social work, but were taken right away to see the very thing we had been hearing about. For instance, after the Juniors heard about the latest theories on juvenile delinquency, we went immediately to the Children's Court hearings where we saw how the young delinquents were actually handled. We then visited reformatories, both good and bad, where we had the opportunity to see just what steps had been taken toward improvement, and what was still needed in order to better conditions.

No small part of this month's experience was our own actual case work, which we carried out three days of each week. From this experience, I learned just how constructive work could be done for families by re-educating them and by helping them to solve their own problems, without any financial assistance whatsoever. For instance one of my cases was a Polish husband and wife with two small and sickly children; the parents could not get along together, the wife earned the daily bread by being a janitress, and the husband could not get work. This is the sort of case where the social worker gives assistance without the aid of money. She can take the children to clinics for treatment, try to interpret the wife to the husband and vice versa, and help the man to get a job. This is merely an example of the steps that are being taken in the way of preventive work and the re-educating of ignorant and helpless people. The need in social work now is many trained social workers who have the time and experience to enable them to unravel peoples' difficulties.

I might mention the delightful week ends which the Juniors spent away from New York City. We were entertained on large estates on Long Island where we could rest and be lazy, or indulge in swimming, tennis, riding, and sailing.

PROCLAMATION

Document of October Fourth In the Year of Our Lord Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-Nine

Hark, hark! All ye of young inferiority

To the privileges of great seniority.

For many years we've toiled and battled on

To reach this state so high, and so supreme

With knocks and blows we've struggled toward the goal

Till now to us, quite justly it doth seem,

That ye should show due reverence to our feat

That ye respect our quickly greying hair

And pay to age the court'sy that is due.

'Tis on this matter, that this scroll doth bear.

First! In the gym at plays and such occasions,

Reserve for us (we seniors deem it wise)

The front seats, nine across and five rows back

To aid our dulling ears, and failing eyes.

Because of age and weakness in our frames,

We bid all under-classmen have a care,

Before ye sit in trolley cars and such

That honored seniors first do have a chair.

Take heed, oh lower classes, we bid you,

Respect, as well you should the curb so hard,

That runs about our campus—and stay off!

For on it, only seniors promenade.

When in the forward rush ye youngsters make

To dining halls, with greed the meal begin

Forget not, stately seniors may be near

And step aside!—to let them saunter in.

Whenever we do wish; it is the custom,

For senior minds to gather and expand

In Knowlton House at supper, their ideas

That lesser minds could never understand.

Then hark to this! ye disrespectful ones,

Know ye, that in all matter of the mail,

It is befitting seniors should come first.

Bear this in mind and in this do not fail.

Then, at the College Tea House we do wish

The fireside table to be kept for us

So that we alway may procure our food

Without transcending to base rush and fuss.

And lastly, most important of the list,

The seniors bid you listen well to this,

Bandannas may be worn on the head

By only those who know a seniors bliss.

Respect in all to senior class is due,

This we expect, from every one of you.

EDITORIALS

The News staff takes great pleasure in welcoming President Blunt to our C. C. campus. For the past two weeks we have been overjoyed by her enthusiastic interest and willing co-operation, and we are looking forward to making this first year under her leadership the finest we have ever had.

Here we are. But where? And where are we getting? And what are we after? How many really know? For all of us are starting on a voyage which is to continue for nine months, with a few short rest periods. Whether it is the first or last lap of our four-year journey, we are all starting on a new phase—a different one than before. But the question is, where are we going? Surely we are not all drifting aimlessly along with no definite destination in view. What a futile, uninteresting and totally fruitless expedition that would be, with no purpose in mind, no goal to reach. We could wander aimlessly forever in this way and never arrive anywhere.

How entirely opposite it is if each of us will "hitch her wagon to a star" and keeping this in mind, go through this year and succeeding ones, getting the finest and the best out of everything around us, and disregarding the useless, small and trivial things. We have so many opportunities here, that we are apt to be very careless, and later find we have thrown away something really worth while, leaving nothing in its place.

It is so easy, so natural to do the lesser things, to be thoughtless and follow the crowd along the simplest road. That is why we need always to have a star ahead so that we will never forget where we are going. And having this star always in sight, if we are mindful of the lofty ideals and the high code of honor that is expected of us here at college, we are sure to find ourselves going steadily forward to our goal.

NOVEMBER 2!

Keep this date open! Invite your friends here for the week end.

MANY FINE SPEAKERS TO ADDRESS COMING VESPER SERVICES

Although the vespers schedule for the coming year has not yet been fully made up, it is evident from the tentative list that we are to have the privilege of hearing a notable series of speakers. Many of these are already known to the college, and others, who are coming here for the first time, are men and women of wide reputation. The speaker this Sunday, October 6, is Dr. Charles E. Spaulding pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of New London, who comes here to the college as the representative of the ministers of the city.

Other speakers will be as follows:

Professor Jerome Davis of Yale Divinity School.

October 20. The Reverend Edward M. Chapman of New London, formerly lecturer in Biblical history here.

October 27. President Henry Sloane Coffin of Union Theological Seminary.

November 3. Mrs. Mary Ely Lyman of Union Theological Seminary and Barnard College.

November 10. Miss Eleanor Cushman of Boston, who has been a member of several of the Grenfell expeditions.

November 17. President Blunt.

December 8. Dr. Ernest M. Ligon of Union College, Schenectady, who was formerly assistant professor of psychology at Connecticut.

January 12. Dr. Bruce Curry of Union Theological Seminary.

January 26. Warden Bernard Iddings Bell of St. Stephen's College, Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. Dr. Bell

REVIEW OF "SIX MRS. GREENES"

"Six Mrs. Greenes," you say to yourself as you settle your lap for the book. "What an idea!" And you think to yourself of the four Mrs. Carrs or the five Mrs. Heywoods in your own relationship, and wonder what on earth could be readable, or even printable, in a work concerning six Mrs. Greenes. Absurd.

This thoroughly delightful person, Lorna Rea, has written a charming and most unusual book. Into the Greene family six women have married, women who differ from one another in age and temperament. In becoming acquainted with them, each with her own idea "about life, about bringing up children, and about her relation to the family," one comes in contact with a surprising and commanding variety of real natures. One has the same sensation, on finishing this book, from which suffers the departing week end guest of an intensely fascinating family. There is so deep and so genuine a sense of human understanding current through the braveries and gayeties and tragedies of this book that it quite attracts and awes one, simultaneously.

"Old Mrs. Greene was very tired." She was aged and failing, but the most vigorous of her remaining impulses were those of keeping the old family ceremonies in practise and the remembrances of her stronger days close at hand. Her existence was one long, stubborn fight against the need of assistance and of change from the schedule of her younger days. She was forgetful, but never could her nurse intimate this quality in her without receiving a quick retort or an acute reprimand. Cheerfully said Mrs. Greene in the morning:

"I'm an ungrateful, cantankerous old woman, and I may last like this for years." But at night:

"Miss Dorset," she called, querulously, "help me to bed. Miss Dorset, I'm tired."

Mrs. Hugh Greene, but a very few years younger, preserved, by means of the indomitable wish that it should be so, an apparently strong body and manner. She was so generously interested in her nephew, Roger, who was poor, and whose young wife was to have a baby, and so wonderfully supported was she by a stout philosophy of unflinching endurance, that she was able to face the thought of her death with one plan only—that of turning over to Roger her fine old home. She said to her nephew:

"I don't want you to think of this as being at all sad. It isn't. Planning for the future is a very happy thing; and now I'm going to bed again."

Beautifully equipped with a knowledge of male faults and a means of stifling them, and full of firm family principles, Edith Beckett became Mrs. Rodney Greene. Most maddeningly human and real is the relationship that Miss Rea establishes between Edith and Rodney—Edith the capable, the mildly but firmly malignant in her treatment of Rodney's vices (smoking, drink, and language)—Rodney, the easy-going, put-upon young husband who found himself, after their return from their honeymoon, "enmeshed in a net of feminine dislikes, restrictions and woes." Edith it was who, (innocently), stirred up scandal against a friend of Rodney's with whom she did not want him to go on a camping trip. The same spirit presided over her treatment of her children; so that it was quite by accident that they turned out to be normal individuals. How perfectly has the character of this young girl who believed herself absolutely fitted for motherhood developed into that of the mother who stifled her children's normal growth, so that they very nearly never grew up at all!

FELICIA

From the time when they marshalled the very mixed and very lively crowd of Feliciaites onto the ferry, until the day two weeks later when the same crowd separated somewhat tearfully at the same ferry, the seven Connecticut girls who were Felicia leaders this summer enjoyed every minute of their experience. The seven were Mary Clauss, Betty Weigle, Ruth Caswell, Elynore Schneider, Prue Bradshaw, Deborah Rand, and Rachel Tyler. Mary Nichols, formerly one of 1930, was also a counsellor there. Any one of them will tell you what a job it is to force prunes, oatmeal, and lettuce down the throats of protesting young New Yorkers, and how almost impossible it is to make those children go quietly to bed at nine-thirty, or wash the dishes, or sweep the floor. But any one of them will also tell you how much fun they had with baseball games, swimming, sleeping on the lawn, pillow fights and raids, stunt nights, treasure hunt, and evenings on the porch when the noisy crew had finally gone to bed. Early in the two weeks, the camp was divided into three teams, each taking the name of a college, and contests were held in singing, cheering, and all the sports. We are glad to say that on the last night it was announced that Connecticut had won by one point. It was the girls themselves, rather than what they did, that made the two weeks so different and interesting to the counsellors. As the custom has been for several years, on the last night, after the counsellors' show, the three best campers were chosen by the leaders, and, as a reward, these three will spend a week-end here at college in the fall. We hope that we can give them as good a time here as they gave us at Felicia.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Greene's greatest misfortune was their marriage. Strangs, (and, we must admit, amusing) circumstances forced Edwin to marry Dora, and strange characteristics of Dora's provided that never should she try to be a comfort or a happiness to Edwin in any way. I could not help feeling that poor, unforgiveable Dora was the least interesting of the Mrs. Greenes. But it is quite probable that in so otherwise delightful a family, there must be one such unpardonably unhappy individual. One notes that the only times that Dora, in her life, really lived intensely and purposefully, occurred when she faced real tragedy.

Helen Guest, nonchalant, talented, clever, fresh, vital, sarcastic, attracted Geoffrey Greene. Said Geoffrey:

"I never meant to kiss you; it was entirely because of the blue door and the way you stood against it. It really was too much, all that blazing blue and green and your red hair." Their love affair was a turbulent, ecstatic, terrible, wonderful thing. Strangely enough, it ended in their getting married; but I felt that two such bewilderingly inspired characters should never have decided to exclude themselves from my experience.

Mrs. Hugh Beckett Greene! Darling little Jessica, wild, impish, affectionate, who stood before her mirror on the morning before her wedding, and said earnestly to her sister:

"I do hope Hugh will like my shape."

"But surely you know he does," said Drusilla, reassuring. "He thinks you're lovely and you are rather, today."

"But he's never seen me stark," said Jessica, simply. "It makes a difference. I think I'm too boyish looking. I'd like to be frightfully feminine just for once."

Oh, wonderful Mrs. Greenes, all of them! They are surly every bit as enjoyable as any friends you will meet. And wonderful Lorna Rea, too, who made of this book one of the most exuberantly colorful studies of human natures that one is likely to find, ever.

I know that each girl personally got out of Junior Month a deeper insight into a great many things. I think that it teaches you to understand people in general much better; it shows the crying need of those poor unfortunates born into an entirely different environment; and it makes you remember that when things don't seem to be going your way and you aren't "getting the breaks," there are thousands of poor individuals far, far worse off than you. It was an experience which I wish each student could have, in that it would enable her to see the present conditions of social work in a particularly revealing way, so that she might interpret it to others and thus gain some of the sympathy and interest of which social work is in need.

DR. GEORGE SARTON TO SPEAK NEXT TUESDAY

The Convocation Series, which promises to be particularly interesting this year, will open October 8, with Dr. George Sarton, Associate of the Carnegie Institution of Washington. Mr. Sarton, who came from Belgium to this country during the War, is now an American citizen. Connecticut College has already had the privilege of appreciating his astounding scholarship, some six or seven years ago, when he spoke in its gymnasium on the New Humanism. This year, his subject is: "Medieval Thought from the Point of View of the Man of Science." Mr. Sarton, who is the type of the true scholar uncompromisingly devoted to his chosen task, has consecrated his life to the creation of a new branch of learning: the History and Philosophy of Science. The first volume of his huge undertaking—now on display in the College library—XII plus 840 pages, was published in May, 1927, and covers the ground from Homer to Omar Khayyam. The second and third volumes, dealing with the development of positive knowledge from the twelfth to the thirteenth century, are practically complete as far as the collection and study of materials are concerned. The author never handles translations. He goes to the original sources. At present, he is giving one day a week to the perfecting of his knowledge of Arabic and Hebrew. The volumes nearing completion will contain, among other things, the first detailed comparison of the Latin and Hebrew transmission of Graeco-Arabic knowledge, and it is said that the Chinese material they contain will be of very exceptional value.

For the last thirteen years, Mr. Sarton has worked mainly in America. Recently he gave a series of thirty-four lectures on the history of science in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries at Harvard and Radcliffe. His researches will cause him to spend the year 1930-31 in Jerusalem and Beirut.

In accepting the invitation of Connecticut College, George Sarton stated that he could only speak informally and without notes, "out of the fullness of his heart."

AROUND CAMPUS WITH PRESS BOARD

One fond parent upon seeing our gorgeous reservoir became quite enthusiastic over the outdoor swimming pool. It takes an outsider to show us what we have in our own back yard. (Dr. Leib in chapel) "Will all the freshmen from Adam to Lord meet downstairs?"

This gives us the secure feeling that at last everyone is here.

Golf has struck the campus. That country-club atmosphere will be quite sporty in our drab lives.

We have been looking forward all summer to seeing the new wings on the Library. They must have fluttered away in fright.

(Senior in cap and gown) "If the wind doesn't stop blowing, I'll be an alumna in a minute."

One consolation to the Freshmen is that if they are awed by any upper classmen it will not be for long. As soon as the moth balls are shaken out of the good old gym costumes, we will all return to the simple life, as it were. There is something about those tunics that not even the strongest personality can rise above.

There are rumors of terrible battles in Winthrop. The wounded are bearing up well, but "revenge is sweet" and the new infirmary will shortly be initiated.

Several of the younger members of the faculty have been cordially greeted by the Freshmen as one of their own. We hope they like that friendly spirit of student-faculty co-operation.

And the Freshman who declared, "Oh, no. I'm not going to pay the blanket tax. I brought my own."

Although we hardly had a drop of water all summer, we knew New London weather wouldn't go back on us—and it didn't! Here we are up to our old tricks again—sneezing in classes—bulging out with books not so cleverly concealed under slickers—and taking little brown pills every half hour and little yellow pills every hour.

(Junior in awed voice as the new golf instructor passes) "I know I should have taken golf."

Freshman initiation was quite a revelation about the hidden instincts of our underclassmen. We suggest that the young lady who made us hungry by eating grass right in front of our eyes write a story on "How I became famous Eating Grass."

tion and dance. President Blunt, Dean Nye, Dean Benedict, Dr. and Mrs. Leib, and Miss Burdick were its sponsors. Pierce's orchestra played for dancing.

During intermission a fashion show was held. The models were Jeanette Shidle, Josephine Lincoln, Anne Ebsen, Jane Williams, Caroline Bradlet, Rosemary Brewer, Grace Wood, Elinor Smart, and Helen Boyd. All the models performed well and showed their costumes in a professional manner, in spite of the fact that they had to parade before a very large, staring audience.

Cakes and punch were served during the evening. The party ended at eleven o'clock.

REPORT OF TWO FACULTY MEMBERS OF GREAT INTEREST

ports of unusually interesting experiences. Mrs. Bessie Bloom Wessel, of the department of social and political sciences, went to Mexico where she attended the three weeks' session of the Seminar for the Co-operative Study of Mexican Life and Culture. This is held each summer at the University of Mexico under the auspices of the Committee on Cultural Relations with Latin America. Mrs. Wessel was chairman of the committee of Church and State, the meetings of which were informally held.

Dr. Henry Lawrence, professor of history and political science at the college, taught two courses in European history and one course in American history at the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute at Hampton, Va., during the first of the two summer terms there. His students, Negroes and Indians, were school superintendents, principals, city and town teachers, and ministers. Some of them were working for graduate credit, but the group as a whole differed widely in age, competence, and previous training, since the only requirement for admission to these courses was that the student must have taught one year before coming to Hampton.

CLOTHES!

as we are going to show you soon.

SUITS of rough, autumnal tweeds, jaunty frocks of new interesting woolsens, coats lavishly fur trimmed—these are just a few things we have to show you. Evening frocks that make you look like a princess in a fairy-tale, slippers fit for Cinderella, and accessories as smart as the combined talents of Paris and New York can make them—come and see—
