JOAN MONDALE: Political Pit-stop

By SARA BARRETT

Joan Mondale, wife of vice president Walter "Fritz" Mondale, made an appearance in a short speech on campus Thursday, September 18, that was just that — an appearance. Though she was here to view the faculty art exhibit currently on display at Cummings Arts Center, her quick visit seemed more like a political pit-stop than a significant show of support for the creative and performing arts.

Mrs. Mondale is an advocate of the arts, with her home set up as a showcase for contemporary American artworks on loan from American museums. After a short introduction from President Ames, she spoke of national and local arts programs, and saw Cummings as a "lively environment of creative activity." She said that Jimmy Carter had a deep commitment to the arts, and that if she were to consider running for public office, she would consider her reasons for being at Cummings, though fitting her art into the political speech, she said she needs our votes because "I want to keep my job as the wife of the vice president." She voted for Jimmy Carter.

After that, the hand-shaking, high-pitched, electrically charged crowd of students who had crowded Dana Foyer along with faculty, who turned students to her, to Mrs. Mondale to the left of the arts atmosphere. Then, with a quick tour of the exhibits and a flash of lights from the working press, she was gone as quickly and ambiguously as she came.

Joan Mondale visited Cummings Arts Center on September 18th.

Room Keys: No Openings

"the new policy was designed with the students in mind"

By SUE ROTATORI

As one of the many students who have already locked themselves out of their rooms, I have come into direct contact with the new master key policy. The new policy states that a person can no longer run to the housefellow to unlock his or her room, because housefellows do not have master keys any more. Instead, if students are locked out of their rooms, they must have campus security come and unlock the room.

This can involve a long wait, and when security does arrive, they cannot always open the door immediately, as sophomore Rick Zief discovered. After a long wait, a campus security officer came, and could not unlock Rick's room with his master key. Rick ended up borrowing a ladder from a repair man and climbing into his second-floor room through the window.

While this is a rather extreme case, it is true that many inconveniences have resulted from the new policy. This is especially true in dorms with self-locking doors, where students can be locked out if the wind blows their door shut while they are out in the hall.

Despite these inconveniences, the policy was designed with the students in mind. Its goal is to protect everyone's security. When the housefellows had master keys, it was difficult to control room entries. Both Mrs. Geiger, head of the Residence Department, and Dean Watson agree that expecting housefellows to control the whereabouts of the master key at all times put a lot of pressure on them. Often, people would borrow the key and not return it immediately, or give the key to someone else. It would be possible for copies of the key to be made jeopardizing security.

Another aim of the new policy is to protect the housefellows themselves. In the past, they have often been falsely accused of entering the or vandalizing rooms. If they have a master key, they can clearly be that type of criticism," Dean Watson explained, "so this is an effort to protect them from being falsely suspected or accused.

From an administrative viewpoint, the policy is effective. Campus security, however, would prefer that the housefellows had keys, it requires much more running around, and detracts from security's mobility. According to one campus security officer, the security car is often unavailable or is late in responding to more important calls because security is busy unlocking someone's door.

The officer feels that some of this running around is unnecessary. No one seems to be aware that the dorm housefellows have master keys, so everyone calls security. If more people would just ask the housefellows to open their rooms, it would cut down security's role considerably.

Whether housefellows or security have the master keys, someone is bound to be unhappy. It appears that for this year at least, security will have to suffer the inconvenience of unlocking rooms. According to Dean Watson, the policy will remain in effect unless security can handle the present situation or some unforeseen problems arise.

At the end of the year, the policy will be evaluated by the same group that decided to implement it this year: Dean Johnson, Mrs. Geiger, Mr. Bianchi (head of campus security) and Dean Watson.

Perhaps the Middle East experts are correct in assuming a Libya-Syria association will soon collapse. It is difficult to foresee President Assad granting contact with his political enemy, Qaddafi, yet Syria would gain the most financially from the deal and Assad must be aware that he would be the one who would have to step aside. Certainly, there is nothing the U.S. can do to the Assad regime, so they will do that in the very least it should not take too long. It would be ill-advised to do the same with Qaddafi.

Libya has become familiar to Americans as of late due to the "Billigate" affair. Perhaps it is more important to think of it as the land of Colonel Qaddafi. Because of his reputation for ruthlessness in tracking down his political enemies, and the political and financial power he wields from his country's oil reserves, Qaddafi's goal of becoming a dominant and unifying figure in the Arab world should frighten observers. In an area of the world where peace or anarchy can depend on a country's leader, the examples of Sadat and Khomeini are obvious. In this case, the increased presence of Colonel Qaddafi in Syria does not better the chances of a continued peace.

Photo by Mike Sladden
Dear Mr. Patrick Kennedy:

I am not a registered Democrat, nor am I affiliated with the Republican Party, but I decided to write you because I have a question that only a prominent political figure might be able to answer. Some of the following questions will not have an answer.

You say the "Republican Party understands the problems of the American worker and the American economic woes." Okay, but your position of a 30 percent tax cut on personal income, among other tax cuts, and accelerated depreciation of capital assets is a contributary factor to the disman its known theories about inflation. You plan on creating a balance by giving more money to people and businesses so that they can increase their spending and investments, i.e. increasing employment and output. But restoring the take of the agriculture industry and consumer's ability to pay for food. After the tax cut, economic growth is expected to increase consumption to spend more and purchase a better quality food at the present time, without coming in consumption with farmers invest in sufficient quantity to increase productivity, or will they simply allow prices to rise until the last supply is exhausted.

But, if farmers do invest, will they invest in more labor, or machinery to decrease labor costs? I say the latter. Furthermore, even if farmers do more workers, who would they hire? Americans, who will work for probably no less than $3.00 per hour, or a Mexican, who will qualify for $1.90 a day? Where employment will go up? So, we have an increased demand for food products, and a maintenance of current productivity, or an increase in labor-saving devices to afford increased demand? Would they be coupled with increased employment of illegal aliens, but no increase in real employment. Either way, prices go up, buying power decreases, and your tax cut funded inflation. I challenge you to show your "welfare worker will invest in labor-saving capital in their businesses.

Similarly, what would happen to prices if petroleum products drop? I think the current $399 system which includes an elegant Technics SA-80 15 watts/channel...$99
$199
$1257 belt-drive, multi-play...$99

You'll find our prices are as good as anybody's...even give them competition. And asking us...Or are you sacrificing the world's energy? Did you read about the growth in Africa? Or made it impossible for us to even give them corn, much less fix it to the world? Would you be happier having a new B-1 bomber or try to feed starving people instead of you?

What makes Tech Hifi the best place to buy stereo.

The buying power of the 65 Tech Hifi stores.
The reason no store has better prices than Tech Hifi is that no dealer buys quality components at such huge volume...to predict prices.

You'll find prices are as good as anybody's, and often better on so many brands.

You might expect to pay extra at Tech Hifi for all the extra things we offer. But you won't.

At Tech Hifi we back what you buy.

When you make any big investment of quality hi-fi, make sure you're getting sound guarantees.

Tech Hifi gives you guarantees most stores don't. They won't give them to you in writing, right on your sales slip.

Our guarantees include a 7-day money-back guarantee, if you're not satisfied (asked), 90-day guarantee, 60-day detective exchange, 3-month full-credit swap (for any reason), and a 1-year warranty.

We are backed by our own regional and national service centers. If the equipment you buy from us ever needs service, we have trained professionals who will make things right fast.

Shop & Compare

RECEIVERS:

Sound Tech 17 watts/channel $69
TDC 1600 with T-Lock Tuning...$119
Technics SA-80 15 watts/channel...$199
SA R3C 30 watts/channel...$199
Hitachi 2010 15 watts/channel...$199
Kenwood (new model) 28 watts/channel...$199
Marantz (new model) 34 watts/channel...$219

RECEIVERS:

Garrard multi-play/wb/disco, cartridge...$109
Collins digital multi-play/capristo...$39
Marantz sa590, belt-drive...$99
Dual 1257 belt-drive: multi-play...$119
HT 3240, belt-drive, stereo...$39

TAPE DECKS:

Hitachi stereo Dolby metal cartridge...$199
Technics multi-play stereo, Dolby...$199

Dolby metal cartridge...$169
Dear Editor:

Imagine my enthusiasm when I saw stacks of College Voices awaiting me at dinner. My excitement was dampened when I learned that the new edition was off the press, or more accurately, off the pressroom. The editorial page was printed backwards.

The College Voice is an editorially independent student newspaper, published weekly during the academic year. All editorial positions are student-staffed, and the student editor is specifically nominated by the student body. The College Voice, however, does not assume responsibility for views expressed by student contributors, but it begins this opinion column by saying: "I do not feel that the student voice is the place for the wobbly arguments which we have heard hundred times already from sloan and Co. Opinion..."

Robert L. Brand

The article on the Soccer team's exhibition game against Manchester University was a good one. However, the mention of Coach Wolfe and the men's basketball team was excellent! However, I am afraid that this article was published just prior to publishing this article prematurely. If the following sports were denied coverage: Cross Country, Men's Tennis, Women's Field Hockey, and Women's Volleyball. By the time of publication, all of these teams had opened their respective seasons.

The article on Coach Wolfe has made him a well-known figure around campus. There is no question that Coach Wolfe deserves the publicity he has gotten. His team has taken an impressive career college career and his coaching career. However, I also know that few people outside of the athletes on this campus know about the new women's Field Hockey and Lacrosse Coach, Mia Lambright. Interestingly, new trainer and Men's Lacrosse Coach Frank Landau. All of these women are celebrities in their own right and have been chosen from pools of qualified applicants. When does the College Voice plan to interview these coaches?

With all of the talk about Title IX, which calls for giving equal funding to men's and women's sports, these past few years, one would assume that a student run newspaper at a school would have paid attention to ALL SPORTS, men's and women's.

During my two years here, the athletic program has improved immensely, due to all of the hard work of the people within the program. Though, the department staff, the coaches, and of course the athletes themselves, two years ago the Men's Soccer team reached the finals of the E.C.A.C. Division III Soccer Tournament, the Women's Volleyball team won the State Championship, and two members of the Women's Crew team reached the finals of the I.R.A. championships. Last December, Coach Doug Schoch, accompanied by all the rest of the men and women's teams, went to the I.R.A. championships. It is a long journey, and Doug could only discover that the concert lived up (or down) to his expectations. He surely missed a very fine concert that evening as the reaction of the audience. Edwards promised a long show which included his old favorites as well as some new tunes of a slightly different style from his latest album. He played what we came to hear and then some, I found Edwards music very pleasant to listen to on Thursday night, and I wasn't even lying down.

Ellen Bodin '90

To the Editor:

Obviously, Doug Weber should never have accepted his "assignment to review Jonathan Edwards". With reservations from the start, Doug could only discover that the concert lived up (or down) to his expectations. He surely missed a very fine concert that evening as the reaction of the audience. Edwards promised a long show which included his old favorites as well as some new tunes of a slightly different style from his latest album. He played what we came to hear and then some, I found Edwards music very pleasant to listen to on Thursday night, and I wasn't even lying down.

Ellen Bodin '90

SPORTS EDITOR
Tara Stinde
OFF THE TRACK EDITOR
Allison Moore
ART EDITORS
Ruth American
Kerry Sayward
LAYOUT DIRECTORS
Linda Stone
ADVERTISING DIRECTOR
Ron Vancil
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS
John Hunt
Libby Rich
Mary Pertl
CIRCULATION
Mary Keating

Rachel Youree

The College Voice is an editorially independent student newspaper, published weekly during the academic year. All opinions are those of student contributors, and the student editor is specifically nominated by the student body. The College Voice, however, does not assume responsibility for views expressed by student contributors, but it begins this opinion column by saying: "I do not feel that the student voice is the place for the wobbly arguments which we have heard hundred times already from sloan and Co. Opinion..."

Robert L. Brand

The article on the Soccer team's exhibition game against Manchester University was a good one. However, the mention of Coach Wolfe and the men's basketball team was excellent! However, I am afraid that this article was published just prior to publishing this article prematurely. If the following sports were denied coverage: Cross Country, Men's Tennis, Women's Field Hockey, and Women's Volleyball. By the time of publication, all of these teams had opened their respective seasons.

The article on Coach Wolfe has made him a well-known figure around campus. There is no question that Coach Wolfe deserves the publicity he has gotten. His team has taken an impressive career college career and his coaching career. However, I also know that few people outside of the athletes on this campus know about the new women's Field Hockey and Lacrosse Coach, Mia Lambright. Interestingly, new trainer and Men's Lacrosse Coach Frank Landau. All of these women are celebrities in their own right and have been chosen from pools of qualified applicants. When does the College Voice plan to interview these coaches?

With all of the talk about Title IX, which calls for giving equal funding to men's and women's sports, these past few years, one would assume that a student run newspaper at a school would have paid attention to ALL SPORTS, men's and women's.

During my two years here, the athletic program has improved immensely, due to all of the hard work of the people within the program. Though, the department staff, the coaches, and of course the athletes themselves, two years ago the Men's Soccer team reached the finals of the E.C.A.C. Division III Soccer Tournament, the Women's Volleyball team won the State Championship, and two members of the Women's Crew team reached the finals of the I.R.A. championships. Last December, Coach Doug Schoch, accompanied by all the rest of the men and women's teams, went to the I.R.A. championships. It is a long journey, and Doug could only discover that the concert lived up (or down) to his expectations. He surely missed a very fine concert that evening as the reaction of the audience. Edwards promised a long show which included his old favorites as well as some new tunes of a slightly different style from his latest album. He played what we came to hear and then some, I found Edwards music very pleasant to listen to on Thursday night, and I wasn't even lying down.

Ellen Bodin '90

To the Editor:

Obviously, Doug Weber should never have accepted his "assignment to review Jonathan Edwards". With reservations from the start, Doug could only discover that the concert lived up (or down) to his expectations. He surely missed a very fine concert that evening as the reaction of the audience. Edwards promised a long show which included his old favorites as well as some new tunes of a slightly different style from his latest album. He played what we came to hear and then some, I found Edwards music very pleasant to listen to on Thursday night, and I wasn't even lying down.

Ellen Bodin '90

SPORTS EDITOR
Tara Stinde
OFF THE TRACK EDITOR
Allison Moore
ART EDITORS
Ruth American
Kerry Sayward
LAYOUT DIRECTORS
Linda Stone
ADVERTISING DIRECTOR
Ron Vancil
LAYOUT ASSISTANTS
John Hunt
Libby Rich
Mary Pertl
CIRCULATION
Mary Keating

Rachel Youree

The College Voice is an editorially independent student newspaper, published weekly during the academic year. All opinions are those of student contributors, and the student editor is specifically nominated by the student body. The College Voice, however, does not assume responsibility for views expressed by student contributors, but it begins this opinion column by saying: "I do not feel that the student voice is the place for the wobbly arguments which we have heard hundred times already from sloan and Co. Opinion..."

Robert L. Brand

The article on the Soccer team's exhibition game against Manchester University was a good one. However, the mention of Coach Wolfe and the men's basketball team was excellent! However, I am afraid that this article was published just prior to publishing this article prematurely. If the following sports were denied coverage: Cross Country, Men's Tennis, Women's Field Hockey, and Women's Volleyball. By the time of publication, all of these teams had opened their respective seasons.

The article on Coach Wolfe has made him a well-known figure around campus. There is no question that Coach Wolfe deserves the publicity he has gotten. His team has taken an impressive career college career and his coaching career. However, I also know that few people outside of the athletes on this campus know about the new women's Field Hockey and Lacrosse Coach, Mia Lambright. Interestingly, new trainer and Men's Lacrosse Coach Frank Landau. All of these women are celebrities in their own right and have been chosen from pools of qualified applicants. When does the College Voice plan to interview these coaches?

With all of the talk about Title IX, which calls for giving equal funding to men's and women's sports, these past few years, one would assume that a student run newspaper at a school would have paid attention to ALL SPORTS, men's and women's.

During my two years here, the athletic program has improved immensely, due to all of the hard work of the people within the program. Though, the department staff, the coaches, and of course the athletes themselves, two years ago the Men's Soccer team reached the finals of the E.C.A.C. Division III Soccer Tournament, the Women's Volleyball team won the State Championship, and two members of the Women's Crew team reached the finals of the I.R.A. championships. Last December, Coach Doug Schoch, accompanied by all the rest of the men and women's teams, went to the I.R.A. championships. It is a long journey, and Doug could only discover that the concert lived up (or down) to his expectations. He surely missed a very fine concert that evening as the reaction of the audience. Edwards promised a long show which included his old favorites as well as some new tunes of a slightly different style from his latest album. He played what we came to hear and then some, I found Edwards music very pleasant to listen to on Thursday night, and I wasn't even lying down.

Ellen Bodin '90

To the Editor:

Obviously, Doug Weber should never have accepted his "assignment to review Jonathan Edwards". With reservations from the start, Doug could only discover that the concert lived up (or down) to his expectations. He surely missed a very fine concert that evening as the reaction of the audience. Edwards promised a long show which included his old favorites as well as some new tunes of a slightly different style from his latest album. He played what we came to hear and then some, I found Edwards music very pleasant to listen to on Thursday night, and I wasn't even lying down.

Ellen Bodin '90
HARRIS REFECTORY: New and Improved

By JOHN P. HOERR

Returning Conn. College students will have noticed that Harris Refectory has undergone renovations this summer that have reduced congestion in the food service corridor and have improved the dining area itself. Also included in the renovations, but not visible to students, is a new heating system for the Harris kitchen. The work, which was partially funded by a government grant, cost about $240,000.

Providing a clearer access through Harris' corridor especially near the tray return, was the goal of much of the renovation in Harris. Alcoves which once opened into the hall were built out. The curtains were also rejected as the girls' interests in art and decoration were outgrowing their use. Also, the curtains were moved back and shortened to allow freer heat circulation and access to the dining room's windows.

The new heating system in the kitchen relies on the excess heat thrown off by the equipment it contains. The hot air is drawn up into a heat exchanger on the roof where it warms fresh air that is then blown into the kitchen. The system will pay for itself in three years at present oil prices. The professionally painted mural that now decorates the walls in Harris has disturbed some students who wonder why student art talent wasn't used for the project. Geiger, who did not operate exclusively for the girls' interests and is excited about its potential as a valuable asset raised by the Conn. College. Hopefully, it will soon become a well established service, providing support for a host of international communication. Mrs. Ammirati concluded, "It will be nice to have a one-to-one interchange with students, and to give a more focal point on writing."

Hours: Monday, Wednesday, Friday 9:30 to 12:30, Tuesday 3:30 to 6:30, Thursday 7:00 to 10:00 p.m.
ENTERTAINMENT

Faculty Artists Exhibit Diversity

By PATRICIA DADDONA

I sat in front of art professor Barkley Hendrickson and waited for his answer to the question, "What do you consider the best faculty art exhibit?" He paused, and replies with an exasperated Eye Roll as if to say, "I don't like Picasso." The curator, over-heard, turned to me and asked, "Which one?"

To say that the faculty art exhibit is as varied as the talents of the professors who display at the Manwaring and Main Galleries as well as in the 66 room of the Cummings Art Center, reflects enormous diversity.

The different media used range from painting to clay, to stone, to metal, to pastel, to gouache, and to mixed media. This is not a complete list. Subject matter is also varied: there are people, places, pots, fairy tales, and abstract paintings. Each artist-professor is committed to his or her department.

The first works one comes upon when entering Cumming's Art Center are the two larger paintings done in Rome, and the two smaller ones, the volumetric shapes and colors feed off of each other. Hendrickson pointed out, not excluding the works in such a small department.

The following year, she people that I have talked to good attempt to overcome the constant and intense. lights, making for a very religious posters still adorned the waUs, but tables with seemingly precarious backdrop, which used to microphones, the acoustics are excellent.

The Garde's activities included films that do this for us. simply an enjoyable way to escape. Yet a good film can accomplish something of this nature. it can right our wrongs and make the world a little bit better.

The Garde is eager to expand and become a thriving multimedia, and for this reason, it is one of the side benefits of my job. Andrea Lorenz, the theatre's Managing Director. The Garde Theory is that we were both overwhelmed by the beauty of the language, and a great-looking Italian actor. For the past two years, we both discussed learning Italian. Finally, the Garde, we vowed we would take Italian together.

The following year, she kept not permitted; I did not get rid of the "nasty" medium he says, to the terms a "natural language." He even suggests choreography, as he tried in shooting, "to catch little movements of main interest, however, the lies the urban landscape depicted in his photographs of a miniature golf course, a traveling amusement park, and New London's McDonough's restaurante. His pre-occupation with "American disposable culture" is fairly constant and intense.

Of Richard Lukovus's four watercolors, there are por-traits — one distorted, one expressionistic, and one straight-forward. His fourth painting is of a pine tree. Of this particular theme he says, "It is very easy to use, but very demanding in its con-trivances, which includes a stoneware jar, a porcelain vase, a beautiful place setting as part of a film's, and two specimens from a "window" to the world of "Artichoke" and "Ski-Diving Tiger." He differs himself from the first group as utilitarian, and commented that his use of the "window" is merely to avoid the censure of those who consider it a trite and hackneyed symbol.

David Smalley's three collages, entitled "Futura de Deus," "Duet II," and "Long Road Home," are His experience again. The organizers made a good attempt to overcome the limited atmosphere of the home. Perhaps best was still in the bookcases, and an overwhelming sense of the walls, but tables with checkered tablecloths were the only thing missing. The Garde's atmosphere was often found in such a small space. But this "nasty" medium he says, to

"En Garde"

By NANCY MINNICK

This past summer the Garde Theatre mounted an excellent production of Ray Charles in concert and show "Beaull Meade." This season's productions, which opened with the production of Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit," September 18, will include a variety of dance, music, and theatrical presentation. Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit," will be performed on December 12. At this time the children's series begins with "Robin Hood" on November 1. 2:00 PM; include: "Mary Poppins," "The Christmas Dance of Us Kids Dancing." The latter show features eight foot puppets and a theme of different forms of communications available for these productions.

The Garde Theatre, the theatre's Managing Artistic Director, next year's season features four musicals, three dance productions, four repertory groups, four contemporary plays, three classics, two children's shows, and a diversity of performance, including...
Men's Soccer: "Dynamite"

By ANDREW CHAIT

The men's soccer team has once again gotten off to a hot start, the team's record now stands at 5-0, with victories over the University of Hartford, a Division I school, and Quinnipiac, the number 5 school in the New England Division II poll. A hot start is nothing new for the Camels. Two years ago, the team was 14-3, and was beaten 1-0 by Colby, in the New England Division III championship game. Last year, the team was tournament bound until they lost to Trinity 2-1 in double overtime, and Nichols 1-0 in horrendous conditions, to finish the season at 11-4, the best winning percentage in Division III.

The Camels opened the season on September 13th with a 2-1 win over Fairfield University. Fairfield took a 1-0 lead in the first half on a goal by John Zappala at the 29 minute mark. The Camels had some chances to score this half, but were continuously thwarted by Dave Barnard, who had the ball up field and passed it off to Sayward. Just when it looked like the Camels would have to settle for a tie in this, the home opener, tri-captain, Jim Gabarra, took a crossing pass from freshman, Mike Wilken, and got the ball past Webster for the deciding goal. Other Camels, besides the Groton Connection of Sayward and Gabarra, who stood out were tri-captain, David Geller and freshman goalie, Chip Orcutt. On September 17th, the Camels travelled to Quinnipiac College. The Camels took a 1-0 lead in the 27th minute on a goal by Mike Wilken. Jim Gabarra was credited with the assist on the first goal of Wilken's career and on the third goal of the second half, Quinnipiac tied the game on a goal by Mark Swan. The remainder of the game was battled out in the midfield area as it had been all day. Once again, it looked like the Camels would settle for a tie, but that wasn't to be. At the 84 minute mark, the Camels got a corner kick. Burt Curchura, skillfully crossed the ball to Gabarra, who headed the ball home for his second goal of the season, and his second game winning goal in two games. It was also a big goal in another way for Gabarra. It tied him with the star of Camel's last two years, Jim Luke, for the top place on the Camels all-time scoring list. In his two years Luke scored 50 points. In just over three years, Gabarra has scored 29 goals, and passed off 21 assists to give him the magic number and Randall Kitzl said, "the team is working hard every day, shooting and sharpening their skills."

Kevin Sayward helps Camels to victory,

"It's Called Competition"

By MARSHA WILLIAMS

Thursday night's home game against Albertus Magnus officially opened the season for the Connecticut College Volleyball Team. Marilyn Gelish has returned as the coach. Beth Offenhartz and Margot Moser have returned as co-captains. Carol Marton is back. Beth Schelling and Kim Carlson are back. Michele Blanchard, Beth Brown, Meg Garvey, and Megan Vosburgh are back. The new faces on the court are those of Emily Bloch, Carolyn Gandeski, Beth Leuchten, Amanda Roche, and Shona Lessig. The Aoberitus Magnus game was: the Camels completely over powered them. The first three games, 15-3, 15-4, and 15-7. Said Beth Offenhartz, "it was a good game, but it wasn't a great game; this year, we're going for perfection."

"This has to be the season," Coach Gelish commented on the predominately veteran team, which also includes five seniors. They practice daily, conditioning as well as sharpening their skills.

This year the Volleyball Team will be hosting the Division III tournament, which involves qualifying colleges in the New England area. Thus, the weekend of October 11 will be big for the women.

A big difference between this season and the last is the schedule. The Camels are scheduled for at least 36 games, more than any previous season. When asked what might change the current schedule, Ms. Gelish replied quite simply a "called petition." Well, we're behind the team all the way."

Photos by Carolyn Blackman and Philip Frankl

Freshman Shelley Warman aids lady Camels to victory over Central State College.

The Women's Field Hockey Team will host Barrington College Saturday at 2:00. Come and support the team. (The field is located in front of Knowton Dormitory.)

When asked about this year's team, Coach Bill Leski said, "DYNAMITE" This is the first time in my ten years of coaching that we have had four seniors and three juniors who have played together for three years. When the game gets tough we look to them. They will make the type of play that they have been taught, and will not press the panic button. The first two games are evidence of this. Those were very good teams that we beat. The team itself consists of above average players and one superstar - Jim Gabarra. When the game gets tough, someone else will step in and do the job."

"Tri-captain, David Geller, calls the team that the best that he has ever been on during his four years here. Geller insists that there is no team on the schedule that the Camels can not beat. Juniors Steve Barnard and Collette Beaulieu also added another goal at 15 minutes and it looked like Cam. meant business, Central came back and tallied three goals of their own, one each by Anne Roche, Kim Piawecki and Edie Othelson. Central was up 3-2 at the half. At 25 minutes into the second half Conn. capitalized on a short corner situation. The play went from Peters to Quiqley and back to Peters for the score. That tied it up at 3 all. With 5 minutes left in the game Susan Quiqley tipped in a Collette Beaulieu centering pass to give the Camels the lead 4-3."

The J.V. team lost 2-3 in a close contest with Central's J.V. and Varsity players. The women played well midfield but were unable to follow up on their circle.

The Women's Field Hockey Team will host Barrington College Saturday at 2:00. Come and support the team. (The field is located in front of Knowton Dormitory.)

The Connecticut College Women's Tennis Team stroked its way to a 7-4 victory over Central Connecticut State College in the opening match of the season. The Camels, led by captain Nancy Garlock, looked strong in the opening match of the season and took three sets from the Central competition. The singles action saw many new Conn. College faces as four of the starting five singles players were freshmen. Some spectators were seen commenting that they may have thought they were seeing double (and they were) as Conn's number one and two singles twins CIC and Krie Kosman faced the Central's number one and two singles twins Lisa and Dena Tarrant.

Results were as follows:

Kosman (CC) defeated Tarrant (C) 6-1, 6-1
Kosman (CC) defeated Tarrant (C) 6-1, 6-2
Knollow (CC) defeated Colandro (C) 7-5, 6-1
Gordon (CC) defeated Horton (C) 6-2, 6-0
Scafer (CC) defeated Burbridge (C) 6-1, 6-0
Brady- Reynolds (CC) defeated Lee-Hendrix (C) 6-5, 6-3
Nichols-Garlock (CC) defeated Chrusciel-Lester (C) 6-2, 6-0
The main addition to create these facilities will be a volleyball net and something like a bocce ball court on the green where the new north barbeque is. As Conklin puts it, "If dorms or other groups want game situations they can have the opportunity." Conklin also wants the students to learn to organize recreation themselves. She is offering a course in the spring for graduate leadership. She is very much in favor of student taught courses. She will last a couple of weeks. She feels that participation is the key.

She is responsible for the scheduling of the many rooms in the Crozier-Williams complex. Karl Beiler and Plant Houseellow, Ellen Levine, both play an integral part in Cro's management. She tells one that people can figure out what space is available at what time, there will be a bulletin board with the recorded signups. Confusion will be greatly eliminated.

Nita Lambraghini, 1979 Springfield College graduate, has become a new addition to the Conn College Physical Education Department. As assistant, Nita is coaching the women's field hockey team and plans to coach the women's lacrosse team in the spring. Nita is coming to Connecticut College with four years' experience of playing on a college varsity field hockey team and one year's experience of assistant coaching women's field hockey at Springfield College.

Nita has a very positive view towards her fall team and for Connecticut College as a whole. She finds that her team has great potential. Although the women's field hockey team is, predominantly, a young group, Nita finds that her players have good attitudes and are willing to work to improve.

Marilyn Conklin encourages "spontaneous recreation." The main addition to create these facilities will be a volleyball net and something like a bocce ball court on the green where the new north barbeque is. As Conklin puts it, "If dorms or other groups want game situations they can have the opportunity." Conklin also wants the students to learn to organize recreation themselves. She is offering a course in the spring for graduate leadership. She is very much in favor of student taught courses.

Successful Careers
Don't Just Happen

At the Institute for Paralegal Training we have prepared over 4,000 college graduates for careers in law, business and finance. After just three months of intensive training, we will place you in a stimulating and challenging position that offers professional growth and expanding career opportunities. As a Legal Assistant you will work traditionally performed by attorneys and other professionals in law firms, corporations, banks, government agencies and insurance companies.

Furthermore, you will earn graduate credit towards a Master of Arts in Legal Studies through Antioch School of Law for all course work completed at The Institute.

We are regarded as the nation's finest and most prestigious program for training legal specialists for law firms, corporations, banks, government agencies and insurance companies. As a Legal Assistant you will work traditionally performed by attorneys and other professionals in law firms, corporations, banks, government agencies and insurance companies. As a Legal Assistant you will work traditionally performed by attorneys and other professionals in law firms, corporations, banks, government agencies and insurance companies.

You may be eligible for a substantial tuition refund.

If you are a senior in high academic standing and looking for the most practical way to begin your career, contact your Placement Office for an interview with our representative.

We will visit your campus on: Tuesday, October 28
The lore of Connecticut College abounds with tales of the curious blue-clad folk who live on the far side of Route 32. According to some accounts, they are a stalwart and virginal people, others say they are invertebrate, laccivious lackeys of the evil military-industrial machine, while the rest assure us that they are only people, just like you and me. I am still not sure whether any of these accounts are true, and I have lived among the merry folk of the United States Coast Guard Academy for four years. In that time I have learned to sleep and eat as they do. I have learned their courtship dances and participated in their colorful rituals and official services. I have, however, not suffered any punishment according to their law. I will not attempt to vouch for the entire subculture in the limited space of a five page essay, but I would like to offer a few of the insights afforded by my peculiar viewpoint, and I would like to explain what these blue-clad souls yearn for the seagoing life was an engaging vantage point. I would like to explain what these souls yearn for the seagoing life was an engaging vantage point. and I would like to explain what these blue-clad souls yearn for the seagoing life was an engaging vantage point. and I would like to explain what these blue-clad souls yearn for the seagoing life was an engaging vantage point.

If there is a cadet at the Academy who started singing 'Semper Paratus', the moment the doctor slapped her backside once for no reason, I have never met him. A few cadets are from Coast Guard families, a few are from fishing families, and a few just adore the simplicity and solemnity of society where status is determined by the number of stripes on your sleeve. If you ask most cadets why they decided to come here, they will shrug their shoulders and say, "I don't know, it seemed like a good idea at the time." I suppose the humanitarian mission of the Academy has attracted the more altruistic minds and bodies to atrophy in an officer's prison-type uniforms and to spend the entire year. But for most of us these attractions were counterbalanced by the prospect of getting our hair cut off, of being told when to sleep, wake up, study, eat, work, and have fun, of having to memorize a billion bits of trivia and having to run around like robots for an entire year. It would be nice to be able to say we came because seawater courses through our veins and our survival depends on the splitting spray against our faces, but that would be romantic, and wrong. I don't have statistics but I believe for most of us the deciding factor was money. At least it was for me. My father is in that unfortunate tax bracket of upper middle class workers who are too pointwise to be eligible for financial aid, too poor to send their children to college without serious financial strain, and too honest to juggle the books. I remember several long talks with my parents; they assured me the decisions to come to the Academy was entirely my own, and if I opted to go to a civilian school they would manage, somehow. I'm sure they were not consciously trying to pressure me, but they hinted at their true wishes in subtle ways. Shortly after my mother threatening me with ALPO helper for dinner I clearly heed my country call.

So I accepted my appointment and I showed up at those iron gates on June 28, 1976 with three hundred other dazed and disoriented members of what we were led to believe was the cream of America's youth. I got my haircut. I slept, woke up, studied, ate, worked and had everything that made us what we were; they locked up our perfectly good civilian clothes and gave us drab prison-type uniforms and baseball caps; they tried to obliterate life-long habits in a few days and they were usually successful. At first I could barely tell one of us from another because with their shaved heads and uniforms all these "swabs" looked alike to me. But soon their personalities began to emerge from the ocean of sameness, and I realized that each one of us had his little strep-, talents, and quirks. A few were complex, and all were confused. We pulled each other through "swab summer," some of us doing more of the pulling, some of us being pulled. We perished constantly in the summer sun, we did pushups until our arms would not heed the played intramural soccer, tennis, and frisbeeball, we had a week's cruise on the Eagle, I had a wonderful time adapting protest songs to our little community, and we all used to delight in the creative bitching and psychoanalysis of our platoon commanders. The good times weren't worth the bad, but they kept us sane.

Despite the toilness of this self-imposed, Mickey Mouse purgatory, few of us resigned that summer or that year, because at the time sticking it out one more day seemed easier than going home and admitting defeat, of telling our parents that we had given up a free education so they could pay for one. I still could not see our goal at the end of the tortured road we were traveling, but I stayed. Most of the hazing ended with the summer, and after the first year they seemed to recognize that we were people, or at least they showed some respect for a Coast Guard officer. After four years they still control our commings and goings, and to some extent they will for the rest of our Coast Guard careers. As cadets we still go through meaningless rituals. We have formations before every meal where we stand around and have a little roll call so they can be sure nobody has escaped since the last meal; we spend each Saturday morning cleaning up dorms, worrying about whether our hangers are all going the right way. We have commissioned Coast Guard officers to check our own hanger alignment.

Each Friday afternoon during the Spring and Fall we have drill, which is another glorified roll call. The bored of the rifles we use for drill have been sealed with lead so we won't be tempted to shoot ourselves. The rifleman's butt that's a good idea. At least they have to force us to switch to rubber swords, so if the Russians try to invade the Academy we can still stab them. With rubber swords we wouldn't stand a chance.

But all these rituals are silly and painful. As you grow up in this place it becomes easier to stick it out another day or month or year. And one day, somewhere deep down inside you, the embryo of a notion is inborn, and you realize that the notion that as long as you don't have any other plans, you might as well stay is more appealing than the thought of going home and admitting defeat, of telling your parents that you have given up a free education so they could pay for one. I still could not see our goal at the end of the tortured road we were traveling, but I stayed. Most of the hazing ended with the summer, and after the first year they seemed to recognize that we were people, or at least they showed some respect for a Coast Guard officer. After four years they still control our commings and goings, and to some extent they will for the rest of our Coast Guard careers. As cadets we still go through meaningless rituals. We have formations before every meal where we stand around and have a little roll call so they can be sure nobody has escaped since the last meal; we spend each Saturday morning cleaning up dorms, worrying about whether our hangers are all going the right way. We have commissioned Coast Guard officers to check our own hanger alignment.

Each Friday afternoon during the Spring and Fall we have drill, which is another glorified roll call. The bored of the rifles we use for drill have been sealed with lead so we won't be tempted to shoot ourselves. The rifleman's butt that's a good idea. At least they have to force us to switch to rubber swords, so if the Russians try to invade the Academy we can still stab them. With rubber swords we wouldn't stand a chance.

But all these rituals are silly and painful. As you grow up in this place it becomes easier to stick it out another day or month or year. And one day, somewhere deep down inside you, the embryo of a notion is inborn, and you realize that the notion that as long as you don't have any other plans, you might as well stay is more appealing than the thought of going home and admitting defeat, of telling your parents that you have given up a free education so they could pay for one. I still could not see our goal at the end of the tortured road we were traveling, but I stayed. Most of the hazing ended with the summer, and after the first year they seemed to recognize that we were people, or at least they showed some respect for a Coast Guard officer. After four years they still control our commings and goings, and to some extent they will for the rest of our Coast Guard careers. As cadets we still go through meaningless rituals. We have formations before every meal where we stand around and have a little roll call so they can be sure nobody has escaped since the last meal; we spend each Saturday morning cleaning up dorms, worrying about whether our hangers are all going the right way. We have commissioned Coast Guard officers to check our own hanger alignment.

Each Friday afternoon during the Spring and Fall we have drill, which is another glorified roll call. The bored of the rifles we use for drill have been sealed with lead so we won't be tempted to shoot ourselves. The rifleman's butt that's a good idea. At least they have to force us to switch to rubber swords, so if the Russians try to invade the Academy we can still stab them. With rubber swords we wouldn't stand a chance.

But all these rituals are silly and painful. As you grow up in this place it becomes easier to stick it out another day or month or year. And one day, somewhere deep down inside you, the embryo of a notion is inborn, and you realize that the notion that as long as you don't have any other plans, you might as well stay is more appealing than the thought of going home and admitting defeat, of telling your parents that you have given up a free education so they could pay for one. I still could not see our goal at the end of the tortured road we were traveling, but I stayed. Most of the hazing ended with the summer, and after the first year they seemed to recognize that we were people, or at least they showed some respect for a Coast Guard officer. After four years they still control our commings and goings, and to some extent they will for the rest of our Coast Guard careers. As cadets we still go through meaningless rituals. We have formations before every meal where we stand around and have a little roll call so they can be sure nobody has escaped since the last meal; we spend each Saturday morning cleaning up dorms, worrying about whether our hangers are all going the right way. We have commissioned Coast Guard officers to check our own hanger alignment.

Each Friday afternoon during the Spring and Fall we have drill, which is another glorified roll call. The bored of the rifles we use for drill have been sealed with lead so we won't be tempted to shoot ourselves. The rifleman's butt that's a good idea. At least they have to force us to switch to rubber swords, so if the Russians try to invade the Academy we can still stab them. With rubber swords we wouldn't stand a chance.

But all these rituals are silly and painful. As you grow up in this place it becomes easier to stick it out another day or month or year. And one day, somewhere deep down inside you, the embryo of a notion is inborn, and you realize that the notion that as long as you don't have any other plans, you might as well stay is more appealing than the thought of going home and admitting defeat, of telling your parents that you have given up a free education so they could pay for one. I still could not see our goal at the end of the tortured road we were traveling, but I stayed. Most of the hazing ended with the summer, and after the first year they seemed to recognize that we were people, or at least they showed some respect for a Coast Guard officer. After four years they still control our commings and goings, and to some extent they will for the rest of our Coast Guard careers. As cadets we still go through meaningless rituals. We have formations before every meal where we stand around and have a little roll call so they can be sure nobody has escaped since the last meal; we spend each Saturday morning cleaning up dorms, worrying about whether our hangers are all going the right way. We have commissioned Coast Guard officers to check our own hanger alignment.
The Republicans believe that the less a government does, the more effective it is. They believe tax cuts will enable the private sector to solve our unemployment problem. The Democrats believe that a partnership between business, labor, the community, and government is needed to effectively deal with the complex problems of our society.

The Democrats have supported moderate increases in defense spending, while being less adventurous in foreign military adventures than any recent administration. The Republicans claim that all our foreign problems could be solved by spending more on weapons and using our military power. We will make no progress towards ending the arms race if, as the Republicans urge, we fail to pass the SALT treaty and try to outproduce the Soviet military weaponry. Our interests would not be served by a confrontation with the Soviet Union; the stakes are too high. As we learned in the Vietnam War, we cannot force the rest of the world to bow to our wishes all the time.

In Connecticut we are fortunate to have two excellent candidates running for national offices. Chris Dodd, the progressive congressman from eastern Connecticut, is running for the Senate. Dodd has been influential in energy legislation, including funding for solar energy and fuel assistance for the poor. He is also working to help Connecticut diversify its defense-dependent economy.

Sam Gejdenson has made a name for himself in energy legislation and in reforming the health-care system.

The Republicans think they can fool the American people with promises of economic growth, low taxes, unlimited energy, and invincible military might. The world is not as simple as the Republicans are. In times of crisis, including the Great Depression, the aftermath of World War II, and the civil rights movement of the Sixties, the Democrats have been the leaders of social movements. The Eisenhower Republicans have been the leaders of social movements. The Soviets are the strongholds of social movements. The Democrats have been the leaders of social movements. The world is not as simple as the Republicans are. In times of crisis, including the Great Depression, the aftermath of World War II, and the civil rights movement of the Sixties, the Democrats have been the leaders of social movements. The Eisenhower Republicans have been the leaders of social movements. The Soviets are the strongholds of social movements.

The Republican candidates have supported moderate increases in defense spending, while being less adventurous in foreign military adventures than any recent administration. The Republicans claim that all our foreign problems could be solved by spending more on weapons and using our military power. We will make no progress towards ending the arms race if, as the Republicans urge, we fail to pass the SALT treaty and try to outproduce the Soviet military weaponry. Our interests would not be served by a confrontation with the Soviet Union; the stakes are too high. As we learned in the Vietnam War, we cannot force the rest of the world to bow to our wishes all the time.

In Connecticut we are fortunate to have two excellent candidates running for national offices. Chris Dodd, the progressive congressman from eastern Connecticut, is running for the Senate. Dodd has been influential in energy legislation, including funding for solar energy and fuel assistance for the poor. He is also working to help Connecticut diversify its defense-dependent economy.

Sam Gejdenson has made a name for himself in energy legislation and in reforming the health-care system.

The Republicans think they can fool the American people with promises of economic growth, low taxes, unlimited energy, and invincible military might. The world is not as simple as the Republicans are. In times of crisis, including the Great Depression, the aftermath of World War II, and the civil rights movement of the Sixties, the Democrats have been the leaders of social movements. The Eisenhower Republicans have been the leaders of social movements. The Soviets are the strongholds of social movements. The Democrats have been the leaders of social movements. The world is not as simple as the Republicans are. In times of crisis, including the Great Depression, the aftermath of World War II, and the civil rights movement of the Sixties, the Democrats have been the leaders of social movements. The Eisenhower Republicans have been the leaders of social movements. The Soviets are the strongholds of social movements.
Our business is providing you with music. We have Southeastern Connecticut's Largest selection of quality stereo components and up-to-the-minute records. Whether you're after the latest record, or a new stereo, we're the people to see!

The Best Part About

"BACK TO SCHOOL"

$299.95

THE SANYO SYSTEM

At $299.95 for a complete audio system you have to take time and care to match the right components to provide a good balanced sound. We think that this system is your answer. "Hear it now!"

SONY ADVENT TECHNICS

Finals in the first week back at school? Well, as far as a stereo system goes this could be the final system you have to buy to get the sound you want. Sony receivers have been top sellers and the Advent reputation for speakers and Technics performance for direct drive tables make this system almost too good to be true.

COMPLETE SYSTEM $599.95

INTRODUCING OUR LATEST ADDITION:

THE MUSIC PEOPLE

GROTON SHOPPING PLAZA REAR 82 Plaza Court Groton, CT 06340 203-441-1277

NEW LONDON 90 Bank Street New London, CT 06320 203-442-5314

Copyright © 1980 RPCARC