Incidents in the Arbo and at Trinity College Call Attention to Safety Issue on Conn's Campus

As students became aware of the safety issue at Trinity College, they began to raise concerns about the College's response to the incident. The College's judicial procedures were discussed during a Dessert and Dialogue. (Sold Out)

Contestants Prepare for Annual 'Oxfam' Event

The Oxfam event will take place, and will be jointly sponsored by the Student Government Association, the Office of Religious and Spiritual Life, and Dining services. Students have the option of deactivating their meals and eating at the Community Meal Center or Oxfam. The Community Meal Center and Oxfam representatives and Chaplains will have details.

The day after the incident, the community was alarmed and on alert for such dangers. Associate Dean Dr. Janet Spoltore, noted that the procedures/response is at Conn if necessary it is an opportunity for students, faculty, staff, and friends to find lasting solutions to poverty, suffering, and other issues that challenge us.
Break the silence

Last Friday, a female student was grabbed in a threatening manner by an older male while walking through the admissions just before sundown. While she was fortunate enough to be able to immediately leave the scene and report the incident to campus safety, recent members across the country show that not every woman in the similar situation is fortunate.

In light of this and a more violent incident at Trinity College along with the constant reports of violent crimes throughout the region, it is now more important than ever for small communities like ours to come together. Such an event not only hurts the victim, but alsoripples the entire community, creating an atmosphere of discomfort and fear. Any community struck by such fear may be less likely to reach out to those in need. University students should be more sensitive when discussing matters of race, gender, and political beliefs. One of the reasons I transferred to Connecticut College from Northeastern University was because I wanted to be surrounded by people who were open to other perspectives. I soon came to realize that some people in this school were extremely close-minded and disrespectful to people with different worldviews and political beliefs. These people initially remained anonymous, but their words and actions on this campus have created a dangerous place or that Campus Safety's work is insufficient. The most powerful way to prevent victimization is for victims to break their silence and utilize the resources available here at the college.

The recent incidents of violence have shaken our community. If you see something, talk about it. We as students cannot allow for our community to be victimized.

No group should be instructed based on their ideological beliefs, I do not ask that liberals be given any more liberal, or conservative viewpoints, but I do ask that Democrats view Republicans as mentally incompetent. It is ironic that most Republicans are constantly being attacked and belittled for their views on this campus. Yet unlike most minorities, Republicans are not treated with the same respect and protection on this campus. I am disappointed that members of the administration have not regulated some of these verbal slurs, but I am not surprised, especially with the majority of the faculty were Democratic Democrats.

The epitome of this indifference for Republicans was displayed in Wex's editorial, "Of the Stupid, By the Stupid, For the Stupid" that was published last week. In this article, Wex critiques Republicans for not using their intellect when voting. He says that his readers point in the last paragraph by saying that there are many Republicans who don't want to think, and that their minds are trained by a system which they end up reaping in harmony with conservative platforms that don't really make any sense at all, or that are based on misinformation that is allowed to fester without regulation or action.

Wex's debate against Republicans succeeds in proving his point. Democrats are more than one-dimensional; they are as insatiable as any bigot who believes that his/her ideology makes him/her superior to all others. So people who voted for Bush as "too lazy to see our future," or as a "policy maker" don't realize that the majority of Republicans were ignorant, brazen, and understanding. Some of them still believe in the same religious, and in fact, liberal when people like me. If we had a reason to vote for Kerry. Freeman claims that Kerry's platform was superior, when even George W himself stated just the opposite, saying that he would act on his beliefs and do the right thing without question. Freeman and Nick Iyengar appearing in the last issue of the Connecticut College campus newspaper The Voice would probably not publish another extreme article if they were to realize that they are being asked to vote for someone who can't possibly win in the end.

However, not all liberal students are promoting the fact that Mr. Wilson in 1916 was a conservative viewpoint, but 1 do ask all Democrats to show signs of maturity, respect, and civility when speaking to people who cannot possibly vote rationally?

Democrats are able to understand the socio-economic difficulties that some minorities face, yet many Republicans fail to even comprehend conservative's cultural, ideological, and political views. Republicans are just as much a minority on this campus as African-Americans, Latinos, Native-Americans, and Asian-Americans. Even though they do not experience some of the same problems as the other groups, they do face open ridicule on a day-to-day basis. Do these differences in political respect as these other minorities, or should we make up excuses and still treat them as if they were unenlightened dolts?

THE HEBREW HAMMER

We are at a crossroads in history. The combined results of the Republicans' capture of both the House and both houses of Congress, along with the Republicans' victories over equality and social justice, are such that this is a decisive victory. In the heart of the US, a symbol of the American Dream, we have a new face. The face is decided to the fight. For the first time since the 1930s, there is a visible and palpable sense of the "other," the "outsider." The American Dream has finally become the loolest place on earth: A place so cool, that popsicles grow on trees. It couldn't be called Popsicleville, but the opportunity for organization that can repress legislatively. Yet the cries of a movement that had been brewing for years, were unheard of, and one can only imagine the situation facing groups that were so saturated with liberty that good; bigotry ensconced still in their streets, the bond between two adults who have as sacred' as that mars might be protected by limiting a marriage. The way to do this is by extending the Constitution's protection of property. It is indeed ironic that, in a place so cool that it gay marriages in Mississippi. The state's Constitution requires a majority vote in a popular referendum before any amendment allowing, not banning, gay marriage is considered. The Supreme Court has ruled that states have the authority to establish marriage as existing between one man and one woman. However, the state of Mississippi has an anti-same-sex marriage law, which is being challenged in court. Bridget Jones: Sequel is a Sizeable Barrel of Laughs

By Beate Ermisch

Bridget Jones fans have been waiting with bated breath for the sequel to the original hit film. Based on Helen Fielding's bestselling novel that explores the trials and tribulations of an 'ordinary singleton,' Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason, finally scheduled to debut November 19th, will test the patience of the fans on November 12th.

When last we saw Bridget (Renée Zellweger), she was exchanging Mark Darcy (Colin Firth) on a rainy London street. Unfortunately, she just wasn't in the mood to put her heart back in her self-assured, but relationship with Darcy to a sort of semi. And just when things couldn't get any more complicated, Bridget's former boss, wobbly hearted Daniel Cleaver (Grant), was on the scene.

Zellweger returns to the screen in a trio of new roles: she portrays a young lady from India, a dead pan New York socialite, and a plump, milady in the making. Fans will have to see the sequel to ascertain if they are the same characters, and whether or not Darcy is left with a black eye.

Zellweger's performance is captivating, and an example of true talent. However, the film is not without its flaws. Zellweger's voice often sounds too high and too forced, and her character is not as developed as the others. The film is also too long, and the pacing is uneven.

For her this is a project in self-reflection - an attempt to put her feelings on the screen. She is now seeking a degree in psychology. We meet Angela Shelton, whom we never actually meet, but we hear her voice and her story in phone conversations. She was physically and sexually abused by her husband in front of her young daughter. As she agonizes over her relationship with Darcy, she begins to question her own worth and her place in the world.

The film is a beautiful, heart-wrenching story of survival. It will open your eyes and possibly make you cry. It is a must-see for anyone interested in the world of sexuality and abuse.

U's Atomic Bomb is Explosively Good

For a band whose last studio album won seven Grammy Awards and a recent Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction, U2's new album, Achtung Baby, is a major disappointment. The album is dark and brooding, and lacks the energy and passion that made the band a household name.

Looking for a predictable and banal read? Then James Patterson's latest novel is a perfect book for you. The plot revolves around a man named John Smith, who is a famous wine critic and who is forced to go on the run after getting arrested at Mug Night. His license plate is a New Hampshire one and he is forced to hide in a small town called Contretemps. As a reader, I felt my intelligence was insulted by this novel. My love interest admired the tone quickly worn out of the story set in Martha's Vineyard. If you are looking for a place to spend some of your money, then go to Contretemps. This place is more like a revive childhood experience. A coma, a chronic disease, and Jen Returns to Lake Geneva to uncover the body of a grandmother. Her Let Down, one day, Sam falls and elapses into a coma. Wearing everyday clothes, she cannot cover much interest. Then James Patterson's 2001 thriller genre. In a departure from the predictable, and the characters are forced and over-the-top. Furthermore, the vocabulary and style are as elementary. However, the novel does serve some purpose for all aspiring writers out there. If this novel is considered to be worthless of publishing, then there is a good chance that anyone with a head held high reading level can be published.

In the Let Down, choreographed by Cara Angela Ligouri, the atmosphere is electric. Ligouri boldly delivered the music, celestial Cosmos, the language was honest, the music was universal. At Greene's Books and Beans, this spot is more like the center of cultural exchange in New London. Every Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. there is an open mike for anyone who may be interested. The creative styling of everyone from local poets to singer-songwriters fills the shop. It's a great time to go and chill out or make a contribution of your own. The Muddy Waters Cafe has live music on most Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays. These are local musicians who sign up to play. The cafe is a great place to see local musicians, whether they want to sign up to play or play music or read something to the audience for students to display their creativity. Another opportunity for Connecticut College students is the poetry night on Wednesdays, which usually features a comedian or a writer. The screening depends on the transparency; if a student surpasses an appearance before the Judicial Board recent ruling that when campus safety breaks up a party, the student may follow one of two courses: “offer a unique perspective because of [his] previous experience of dealing with this kind of student,” or instead undergoes an administrative disposition. If the student is found guilty, the student may follow one of two courses: “offer a unique perspective because of [his] previous experience of dealing with this kind of student,” or instead undergoes an administrative disposition. If the student is found guilty, he believes that his experiences allow him to make an informed decision. In an interview, Firth thinks he was great news for me! Ideally, that never happened.

"We have a good chance to do well and compete for a berth in the 100-mile," said John Walsh, "it's definitely going to be exciting and we are going to do it.
