Coffin Takes on New Responsibilities as VP

by KATIE HANDWERGER

Late Coffin, formerly Connecticut College president, was named to take on a new role as Vice President for Enrollment Management. Coffin has assumed the role of enrollment management, leading the Admissions office, Office of Student Financial Aid, and the Office of the Registrar. Coffin’s appointment is significant in light of the college’s recent efforts to increase its national visibility and reputation. Under Coffin’s leadership, the college’s enrollment has grown significantly over the past few years. Coffin is expected to continue to build on these successes and to work closely with the admissions team to attract top-quality students to the college. The college’s efforts to increase diversity and inclusion in its student body will also be a priority for Coffin. Coffin is well-regarded for his commitment to fostering a welcoming and inclusive campus environment. He is expected to bring new energy and perspective to the college’s admissions office, and his leadership is anticipated to be instrumental in achieving the college’s goals for the future.
Should Palm Beach Vote Again?

By Daniel Leptuck

Palm Beach County is a swing county, and the outcome of the 2000 presidential election could have a significant impact on the county's future. The county's success as a whole will be determined by the decisions made in this election, in which every vote matters. The countywide x5218 Hotline, at The College Voice, can also help answer any questions and provide information to voters.

Editorial

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the Editor are due by 5:00pm on the Wednesday preceding publication. The College Voice reserves the right to edit letters for clarity and length. No anonymous or anonymous letters will be published.

Letters, however, may be withheld under the author's request. The College Voice will not publish letters deemed to be a personal attack on an individual. The College Voice cannot guarantee the publication of any submission. Letters should be typed, double-spaced, no longer than 500 words and must include a phone number for verification purposes. Please send your letter via email to: cvoice@conncoll.edu

Letters to the Editor

Contronb Students: It's Time to Watch Your Waste

To the Editor:

On Thursday, October 19, 2000, with the help of Campus Support, the Campus Department, Students Against Violence to the Environment (SAVE), House Environmental Representatives (HERs) and many other volunteers, 675 bags of the college's trash for Pat Buchanan's campaign study Why on Earth?

On Wednesday morning, I went around with a member of the Grounds staff, picking up less than ten bags of trash from each dorm and two or three from each of the academic buildings. The bags were lined up in the pick-up location and dumped on Larrabee Green. The bags were then taken into the residence hall and weighed. One hundred and ten pounds could have been recycled or reused, that's 10% of the total weight of trash.

The 10% figure is not very accurate because the sample taken was not random. The percent of trash that could have been recycled or reused was taken by the volunteers, but would have been much higher had we not sorted it out. We did not do well, however, with recycling the bottles and cans. It's so terribly simple and one of the best and easiest ways you can do your part.

At the time I began to write this, our presidential election had yet to produce definitive results. One thing is certain: our government in Washington will be more polarized than it has been in recent memory. While our political rhetoric has moved so far to the right that the normal middle ground has been nonexistent, the time is ripe to push our country to a new direction.

Our political system now tends to be more and more about personalities than substance. As a result, the people we elect in our government more and more are not the best and most capable people for the job. Our political system is floundering and the American public is tired of it. The system is so much more concerned with who is getting elected to and who is serving in government than with what those people are able to accomplish. Our political system right now is so bickering and so bad that it has an enemy around every corner.

Our national debt is now an issue that is being discussed so much that it is almost a fact of life. Everyone is aware of it, but it doesn't seem to be a major issue, at least not in the presidential election. At the time I began to write this, our presidential election had yet to produce definitive results. One thing is certain: our government in Washington will be more polarized than it has been in recent memory. While our political rhetoric has moved so far to the right that the normal middle ground has been nonexistent, the time is ripe to push our country to a new direction.

Our political system now tends to be more and more about personalities than substance. As a result, the people we elect in our government more and more are not the best and most capable people for the job. Our political system is floundering and the American public is tired of it. The system is so much more concerned with who is getting elected to and who is serving in government than with what those people are able to accomplish. Our political system right now is so bickering and so bad that it has an enemy around every corner. Our national debt is now an issue that is being discussed so much that it is almost a fact of life. Everyone is aware of it, but it doesn't seem to be a major issue, at least not in the presidential election.

And with those thoughts, I'll sign off.
There's Something Rotten in the State of American Politics

SARA KELLEY-MURO

The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. Photographs of the candidates, their homes, and their campaign buttons were plastered everywhere on the internet. It was a constant bombardment of visual stimuli, as if the candidates were trying to sell us something.

As I was driving to the polls, I couldn't help but notice the lack of enthusiasm among the voters. People were apathetic, but it wasn't surprising. Apparently, drawing connections to modern events isn't the norm in the classroom either. I remember during my first class of the semester, my professor asked us to turn on our intuition. He said, "I hope everyone is interested in this topic." But as I turned on the radio, I heard nothing of interest. It was just another day in the life of a student.

I thought about the media's role in drawing connections between modern events and the classroom. It's a missed opportunity to engage students in the political process. As we move closer to the election, I hope more professors will incorporate current events into their lectures.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000
THE COLLEGE VOICE
3

Professor continued, "I think we have to share in the educational process. It's not just about telling the students what happened; it's about involving them in the process." I couldn't agree more. As a student, I want to be involved in the political process. I don't want to be a passive observer. I want to be an active participant.

But the problem is, how do we draw connections between modern events and the classroom? It's not easy. The media's influence is strong, and it's hard to counteract. But I believe it's essential. As the saying goes, "When you have the floor, it's your job to fill it." I hope more professors will take this message to heart.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000

The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. Photographs of the candidates, their homes, and their campaign buttons were plastered everywhere on the internet. It was a constant bombardment of visual stimuli, as if the candidates were trying to sell us something.

As I was driving to the polls, I couldn't help but notice the lack of enthusiasm among the voters. People were apathetic, but it wasn't surprising. Apparently, drawing connections to modern events isn't the norm in the classroom either. I remember during my first class of the semester, my professor asked us to turn on our intuition. He said, "I hope everyone is interested in this topic." But as I turned on the radio, I heard nothing of interest. It was just another day in the life of a student.

I thought about the media's role in drawing connections between modern events and the classroom. It's a missed opportunity to engage students in the political process. As we move closer to the election, I hope more professors will incorporate current events into their lectures.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000
THE COLLEGE VOICE
3

Professor continued, "I think we have to share in the educational process. It's not just about telling the students what happened; it's about involving them in the process." I couldn't agree more. As a student, I want to be involved in the political process. I don't want to be a passive observer. I want to be an active participant.

But the problem is, how do we draw connections between modern events and the classroom? It's not easy. The media's influence is strong, and it's hard to counteract. But I believe it's essential. As the saying goes, "When you have the floor, it's your job to fill it." I hope more professors will take this message to heart.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000

The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. Photographs of the candidates, their homes, and their campaign buttons were plastered everywhere on the internet. It was a constant bombardment of visual stimuli, as if the candidates were trying to sell us something.

As I was driving to the polls, I couldn't help but notice the lack of enthusiasm among the voters. People were apathetic, but it wasn't surprising. Apparently, drawing connections to modern events isn't the norm in the classroom either. I remember during my first class of the semester, my professor asked us to turn on our intuition. He said, "I hope everyone is interested in this topic." But as I turned on the radio, I heard nothing of interest. It was just another day in the life of a student.

I thought about the media's role in drawing connections between modern events and the classroom. It's a missed opportunity to engage students in the political process. As we move closer to the election, I hope more professors will incorporate current events into their lectures.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000
THE COLLEGE VOICE
3

Professor continued, "I think we have to share in the educational process. It's not just about telling the students what happened; it's about involving them in the process." I couldn't agree more. As a student, I want to be involved in the political process. I don't want to be a passive observer. I want to be an active participant.

But the problem is, how do we draw connections between modern events and the classroom? It's not easy. The media's influence is strong, and it's hard to counteract. But I believe it's essential. As the saying goes, "When you have the floor, it's your job to fill it." I hope more professors will take this message to heart.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000

The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. Photographs of the candidates, their homes, and their campaign buttons were plastered everywhere on the internet. It was a constant bombardment of visual stimuli, as if the candidates were trying to sell us something.

As I was driving to the polls, I couldn't help but notice the lack of enthusiasm among the voters. People were apathetic, but it wasn't surprising. Apparently, drawing connections to modern events isn't the norm in the classroom either. I remember during my first class of the semester, my professor asked us to turn on our intuition. He said, "I hope everyone is interested in this topic." But as I turned on the radio, I heard nothing of interest. It was just another day in the life of a student.

I thought about the media's role in drawing connections between modern events and the classroom. It's a missed opportunity to engage students in the political process. As we move closer to the election, I hope more professors will incorporate current events into their lectures.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000
THE COLLEGE VOICE
3

Professor continued, "I think we have to share in the educational process. It's not just about telling the students what happened; it's about involving them in the process." I couldn't agree more. As a student, I want to be involved in the political process. I don't want to be a passive observer. I want to be an active participant.

But the problem is, how do we draw connections between modern events and the classroom? It's not easy. The media's influence is strong, and it's hard to counteract. But I believe it's essential. As the saying goes, "When you have the floor, it's your job to fill it." I hope more professors will take this message to heart.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000

The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. Photographs of the candidates, their homes, and their campaign buttons were plastered everywhere on the internet. It was a constant bombardment of visual stimuli, as if the candidates were trying to sell us something.

As I was driving to the polls, I couldn't help but notice the lack of enthusiasm among the voters. People were apathetic, but it wasn't surprising. Apparently, drawing connections to modern events isn't the norm in the classroom either. I remember during my first class of the semester, my professor asked us to turn on our intuition. He said, "I hope everyone is interested in this topic." But as I turned on the radio, I heard nothing of interest. It was just another day in the life of a student.

I thought about the media's role in drawing connections between modern events and the classroom. It's a missed opportunity to engage students in the political process. As we move closer to the election, I hope more professors will incorporate current events into their lectures.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000
THE COLLEGE VOICE
3

Professor continued, "I think we have to share in the educational process. It's not just about telling the students what happened; it's about involving them in the process." I couldn't agree more. As a student, I want to be involved in the political process. I don't want to be a passive observer. I want to be an active participant.

But the problem is, how do we draw connections between modern events and the classroom? It's not easy. The media's influence is strong, and it's hard to counteract. But I believe it's essential. As the saying goes, "When you have the floor, it's your job to fill it." I hope more professors will take this message to heart.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2000

The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. The only reason I got out of bed this morning was to go up on election day. I spent most of the night in front of my computer, using google image search to find pictures of the candidates. Photographs of the candidates, their homes, and their campaign buttons were plastered everywhere on the internet. It was a constant bombardment of visual stimuli, as if the candidates were trying to sell us something.

As I was driving to the polls, I couldn't help but notice the lack of enthusiasm among the voters. People were apathetic, but it wasn't surprising. Apparently, drawing connections to modern events isn't the norm in the classroom either. I remember during my first class of the semester, my professor asked us to turn on our intuition. He said, "I hope everyone is interested in this topic." But as I turned on the radio, I heard nothing of interest. It was just another day in the life of a student.

I thought about the media's role in drawing connections between modern events and the classroom. It's a missed opportunity to engage students in the political process. As we move closer to the election, I hope more professors will incorporate current events into their lectures.
The current itself was amazing. The Liars, who opened for Dispatch, was a good complement to what was yet to come. When Disp-
Charlie's Angels: Gettin Jiggly With It

By KATIE WASSEL

Charlie's Angels is a legend in its own mind. Her lyrics create an incredible pop rock atmosphere, especially to those of loyal female fans. Any song of Charlie's is a legend, but in that case we only refer to songs that are written for the character's role. When we hear the opening line "I love only one thing in this life," we think of Charlie's Angels. "I love only one thing in this life," is the debut album of the band Missing Joe. This album's opening song, "Everywhere I Fly," is quite possibly the most likeable song of the band. Missing Joe is a band opening gigs for the group Dollmadakia. The trio of bassist, lead vocalist and guitar player, keyboardist are delicate grape leaves, stuffed with fragrant rice, and in the taste of it, the symbol was one of power for each one dominated by men since the beginning of Ani. This symbol was found in the hands of people around me. This would seem like an obvious comment to make, but I feel compelled to order five of the sandwiches at Saeed's. The sandwiches at Saeed's are well informed deviation from the norm. The first thing I notice about the sandwiches at Saeed's is that they come in a variety of nut varieties, as well as chocolate and peanut butter. The store is unimposing in the sense of Ani touched each person there. The sandwiches at Saeed's are delicious meal. I love only one thing in this life, and that thing is music. This was quite an effort to see Sandi Cathran Evans than a dethroned actress in a movie. The sandwiches at Saeed's are delicious meal. I love only one thing in this life, and that thing is music. The store is unimposing in the sense of Ani touched each person there. The sandwiches at Saeed's are delicious meal. I love only one thing in this life, and that thing is music. This was quite an effort to see this life, and that thing is music. The store is unimposing in the sense of Ani touched each person there. The sandwiches at Saeed's are delicious meal.
Exploring a Few of Connecticut’s More Wholesome Options

BY STACY MCHUGH
staff writer

Is too much of the Connecticut College scene getting you down? Too many TNE’s and depressing Saturday night dance parties? Too many boring Fridays? Well believe it or not, there is life off this campus! There are plenty of exciting ways to liven up your weekends without having to drive all over Connecticut. Here are a few ideas that just might add some excitement to your life.

Holiday Bowl (445-6500): If you’re sick of the traditional weekend nights at Conn. College, why not throw on your bowling shoes, shine your ball and hit the object at 27 King’s Highway in Groton? This is a great place to kick back with friends, munch on yummy junk food, and maybe even relieve some stress. They provide shoe rentals and bowling balls for those of you who don’t happen to be professionals. Pizza Hut and vending machines are located in the lounge of the bowling alley if you get hungry.

Regular bowling hours are Monday-Wednesday from 9am-11:30 pm, Thursday 9am-12am, Friday and Saturday 9am-2am, and Sunday 8am-11pm. Check out some of the hot events and special college discounts taking place at Holiday Bowl. Every Thursday night has been designated “College Night.” Present your college ID and bowl all night for $9. You can bowl from 9 to midnight, bowling shoes and two slices of pizza are also included. And if you can’t make it on Thursday night, check out “Galactic Bowl” every Friday night from 11:30 to 2am. Enjoy 2 hours of bowling for $11.95 while Busta’s is just down the road.

Crown Billiards (439-1676): If bowling is not your thing, then how about playing pool? Located within walking distance, 284 Frontage Rd, in the New London Shopping Center. This pool hall is the largest in Southeastern Connecticut and features 18 Crown Gold regulation pool tables, a full-service pro-shop, both a smoking and non-smoking pool room, a pool table, five television sets, and several video games. Snacks and soft drinks are available, but guests are free to bring in their own food. Free coffee is provided as well.

Crown Billiards is open seven days a week, Sunday-Thursday 11am-1am and Friday and Saturday 11am-2am. They rent the tables by the hour, but offer a daily special from 11am-6pm. The special is seven hours of bowling for $10. For more information, check out their website at http://pages.cthome.net/crownbilliards/.

Mystic Aquarium (572-5955): Maybe your nights are full, but you find yourself wasting away your days. Sound familiar? Well why not hang out with the fishes at Mystic Aquarium? It’s a great place to relax, observe, and learn all about aquatic life. There are always new exhibits and exciting water shows to see. This month, for example, on November 17 at 7:30pm, there is going to be a natural history lecture series featuring the Today Show’s wildlife correspondent, Jim Fowler.

The aquarium hours are 10am-4pm. Admission is $16 for non-members, adults, and there are group rates available. There is free parking, indoor and outdoor dining at the Waterfront Cafe, and a cute little gift shop. So the next time you complain about being bored, LEAVE! There are tons of things to do without having to trek all around Connecticut.

So the next time you complain about being bored, LEAVE! There are tons of things to do without having to trek all around Connecticut.

Holiday Bowl in Groton offers a special "College Night" every Thursday that includes bowling all night, shoe rental, and two slices of pizza for nine dollars (Brown). Crown Billiards, located on the New London Shopping Center, is the largest pool hall in Southeastern Connecticut. They offer a daily special of seven hours of billiards for ten dollars. (Brown.)

WATERHOUSE salon

MISSION STATEMENT

Our staff is dedicated to providing you with exceptional services in hair care, skin care, body care, and natural colour cosmetics. The products and services offered at the salon are unique in that they are consistently striving to maintain a harmonious relationship with the environment. We use AVEDA products containing ingredients derived from pure flower and plant essences which enhance the beauty and wellness of the entire body.

At WATERHOUSE we are committed to maintaining awareness of the mind, body and spirit, and welcome the opportunity to share this knowledge with you.

We look forward to sharing the experience of what sets WATERHOUSE (voted #1 in 1999) and AVEDA apart: the art and science of pure plant essence.

136 BANK STREET
NEW LONDON, CT
860.442.9543
debate preceded elections

by tuoba curculian

November 6, 2000, before the election day, the Connecticut College students representing the popular college candidates engaged in a discussion of the hottest issues during the presidency of the ballet box of the Connecticut College students. Zachary Goldsmith of the Connecticut College Republicans, Juno de la Hoz of the Connecticut College Democrats, and Jim Montalto of the Connecticut College Green Party respectively responded and expressed the position of the candidates. Each party discussed such topical questions as educational policy, social issues, such as gay rights, entertainment, the electoral system, and the environment. After the debates, a popular question is whether or not Gaudiani’s resignation will be given off each year for the next four years. A popular question is whether or not Gaudiani’s resignation will be given off each year for the next four years. The focus should be on academics, and Coffin believes that the parts of the strategic plan that deal with aesthetic terms of admissions are all going through a downturn. Coffin is sure that “his President Leszynski’s removal of the students’ Health and Science department will be a great loss for the library.”

Sinn receiving Green Circle award

continued from page 1

COFFIN GETS PROMOTION

Theatre and drama major, assassinated his promotion to a new position at the Connecticut College. Coffin was appointed to the position on October 20 and 21 at the Robards as “O’Neill’s foremost innovator” on the New York Times. Coffin’s answer is, “No.” Bate, who was also on the committee, believes that the parts of the strategic plan that deal with aesthetic terms of admissions are all going through a downturn. Coffin is sure that “his President Leszynski’s removal of the students’ Health and Science department will be a great loss for the library.”

College plans for library overhaul

continued from page 1

In Costa Rica, which was previously used for potatoes, in order to plant a row of trees on every square meter of land, the government has decided to implement a program that will increase the production of carbon dioxide. This program has been put into practice in order to increase the production of carbon dioxide. In 2003, 10,000 trees were planted in Costa Rica, and the program has been expanded to cover an additional 100,000 square meters of land. Since then, the program has been successful, and the production of carbon dioxide has increased significantly.

The focus should be on academics, and Coffin believes that the parts of the strategic plan that deal with aesthetic terms of admissions are all going through a downturn. Coffin is sure that “his President Leszynski’s removal of the students’ Health and Science department will be a great loss for the library.”

COFFIN GETS PROMOTION

Theatre and drama major, assassinated his promotion to a new position at the Connecticut College. Coffin was appointed to the position on October 20 and 21 at the Robards as “O’Neill’s foremost innovator” on the New York Times. Coffin’s answer is, “No.” Bate, who was also on the committee, believes that the parts of the strategic plan that deal with aesthetic terms of admissions are all going through a downturn. Coffin is sure that “his President Leszynski’s removal of the students’ Health and Science department will be a great loss for the library.”
Everything about business is changing. Its pace, paradigms, strategies, global expectations, everyday challenges. That's where you'll come in — with us. You'll leverage the presence of one of today's leading global consulting firms, enabling clients not only to adapt to a radically changing world, but to flourish in it. You'll be part of a team of some 5,500 Associates who provide clients (Fortune 100s, savvy start-ups, non-profits, etc.) with definitive expertise in key areas:

- Benefits Consulting (Leverage world leadership in Retirement, Group & Health Care, and Investment Consulting.)
- Human Capital Consulting (Help clients achieve competitive advantage through the alignment of their workforce with their business strategy.)
- Human Resources Technologies (Use technology to provide custom-designed solutions to human resources and benefit administration challenges.)

We currently have openings available throughout the U.S. and Canada for individuals with a degree in Mathematics, Actuarial Science or Statistics.

If unable to meet with us, please forward your resume to:
Watson Wyatt Worldwide,
80 William St.,
Wellesley Hills, MA 02481;
by Fax: (781) 283-9776;
or by E-mail
East_hr@watsonwyatt.com

For the full Watson Wyatt story, use your browser or write us. Watson Wyatt is an EEO/AA Employer, M/F/D/V.

Visit us at:
www.watsonwyatt.com

Did you know? Watson Wyatt ranks #1 in the consulting industry for overall reputation and delivering value to clients, according to an independent survey conducted by the Wall Street Journal among its subscribers.
Facing Challenging Course, Men's and Women's Cross Country Teams Show Well at ECAC's

The teams didn't do especially well considering the difficult competitive situations from schools including Tufts and Amherst. Ben Brewer '01 finished first for the men, in 40th place overall, with a time of 21:54. He was followed by Matt Kennedy '02 and Ben Reis, who finished 51st and 62nd, respectively.

The women's team finished 14th out of 17 teams, with a team total of 405. Sara Smith '03 finished first for Conn with a time of 29:18, tied for third in the league in points. Huffman (11 goals, 4 assists) and Molly McAuliffe '02 (7 points) were named All-NESCAC First Team.

The seniors lead the defense next season. The team is that they did not play to their potential. The players did not come up to the expectations of the previous year. They are starting the season with a better understanding of the game. The team is that they did not play to their potential.
Freshmen Phenoms Dominate Camel Fall Sports Scene in 2000

This year's sports scene at Conn College has been highlighted by the contributions of first-year athletes. The fall sports season has been marked by a surge of young talent, with freshmen playing key roles in each of Conn's eight fall sports. This influx of new players has not only bolstered Conn's athletic programs but has also given the school a competitive edge in some of its traditionally strong sports.

The most notable freshman phenoms include the women's soccer team, which has been led by first-year striker Emily Huffman, a multiple-time conference player of the week. Huffman has scored six goals this season, including a hat trick in a win over Middlebury.

In men's soccer, Conn has been bolstered by the playing of first-year goalkeeper Laura Knisley, who has been a consistent presence in the goal. Her play has helped Conn maintain a solid defensive record, allowing only eight goals in 10 games.

The women's volleyball team has also benefited from the presence of a strong freshman class, with players like Ali Gorski and褲 Lisa Barry making significant contributions.

In men's tennis, Conn has been led by first-year singles player Ali Gorski, who has been one of the top players in the NESCAC. Gorski has won several key matches, helping Conn to compete against some of the conference's strongest teams.

The men's basketball team has also seen contributions from a number of freshmen, with players like Jack McGinnis and Michael Smith providing depth and experience on the court.

Overall, the freshman class has proven to be more than just a new chapter in Conn College's athletic history. These young athletes have brought a fresh perspective and a sense of excitement to the programs, making Conn College a more formidable force in the NESCAC and beyond.

Women's Volleyball Ends Transition Year

The Connecticut College volleyball team is looking to build on its transition year, which saw the departure of long-time head coach Mike Erefield. The team finished 7-13 in 2000, but has a new head coach in Jen Lamp and a strong group of returning players.

Lamp has been working to instill a new culture of hard work and dedication in the team. She has emphasized the importance of teamwork and individual improvement.

"It's been a challenging time for us," said senior captain Anne McKee. "But Coach Lamp has been great, and we're looking forward to playing some good volleyball this year.

The team is hoping to improve its conference record and make a run at the NESCAC championship.

Women's Sailing Ends Season

The Conn College women's sailing team ended its season with a strong performance in the NESCAC championships. The team finished 3rd overall, marking a significant improvement from last year's 5th-place finish.

"We've come a long way this season," said co-captain Emily Huffman. "The team has really come together, and we're looking forward to next year.

The team's strong showing in the NESCAC championships has put them in position to compete for a national title. With a strong junior class and a solid core of returning sailors, Conn College is well-positioned for future success in the sport.

Sailors' Rating: First; Coed Team Flying

Kathy Hull Won't Slam the Door during a Recent Match (Brown)