Has Racial Undermined

Connection?

Connecticut College has always prided itself on its untitled spirit. Here on campus, there are no social groups that would serve to divide our student body. Instead, it has been directed toward the school. Most of our dorms are now composed of all classes, leading to a communal feeling of a united college.

But in the past months or so, there has been an increasing tendency for certain classes, houses, and organizations to become more important in the daily life of college life. There has developed a disturbing evidence of that point of view in some schools that "my class is the most terrible and therefore my dorm is the most clever and talented house, that group will have the most to contribute toward uplifting others.

This is an entirely different thing from being better or having a better attitude. They neglect, moreover, the fact that all college traditions lose their appeal when reduced to rivalry. The Mascot Hunt last year, although interesting in its own right, nevertheless contained small unrelated incidents. Competitive Singing also has its repercussions. Senior Day had its tense moments when some students considered themselves above looking themselves to what they tought childish actions.

The most significant aspect of all this is the trend of the Daily Summer entertainmentmentertainment increasingly as a decision which would be more appropriate for such a day as any "gee" or a variety show. The energy has turned into a battle between the classes sponsoring the two projects.

On a smaller scale, it is evident at every election that some students vote for members of their own group or house, for that reason alone, even though they might sincerely believe that a person from another group is better fitted for the job.

This sort of happening only works when the students are different enough that they are

Ride Pink Horse Shows Merit Despite Adverse Criticism

by Edith Manasevit

Hunted in those haphazard Sunday newspaper movie studies of a cynic whose experience with the real world of the 1940's is non-existent, that what appears as good is only human perversity and bad the various crutches of publishing. But unlike the confirmed-unsatisfied cynic, the reader accepting the status quo, Montagu seems to be good at the same time that he doubts its existence.

But this suggestion of characterization is conveyed merely by the language, the author achieves coordination or a meaningful pattern. The result is that the characters have been a sharp and clear-cut crime play and, in the novel, characterization, becomes blurred by undefined backgrounds. And that the distinct tinge of the movie had to add to the general coarseness.

Caviler Stressed Need for Planned Economy in Talk

Jess Cavenier, executive secretary of the Connecticut Business Council, discussed the possibilities of future depressions before a meeting of the Yale senior host. Sunday night.

All economic vanes point to a depression in the near future. Mr. Cavenier explained. Just when this crisis will come depends upon the speed with which the Western Region will be able to compete with the U.S. in the market. Other factors, he explained, that are indicated lengths and severity of the depression. The markets complete recovery from the depression by means of a foreign enterprise system and that had to resort to the methods of planned economies.

The post-war economy in Germany, Italy, and the Inequality of the effects of the 1929 disaster until the second World War, illustrated the possibilities of planned economies.

Four Year Plan was then suggested that such an organization was necessary of college, not just in the freshman year. The meeting was to require twelve points a year. This would be an orientation course (or making the big move at last.)

The course in freshman year would be an orientation course to introduce students to the human community. As a national body, the course was intended to be a national body of students.

Grace Albert Merit Cry for More at Ballad Recital Fri.

by Helen Cruumine

One of Miss Albert's more popular songs is "When a Woman Blue," which she first heard down in Texas. As a matter of fact, she learned up most of her songs first hand over there. It is a very lovely song, often spending much time tracking down the mysterious records for her authentic definitions and interpretations, and her singing is equally fine.

Another ballad of special inter- est here at Connecticut was the Erie Canal, which according to Miss Albert, had no man made by the mule skinners as they didn't have enough horses for the Erie Canal. The chorus of this song is: "On the banks of the Erie Canal, there rose a song..." and the rest is unprintable.

Miss Albert opened an entirely new field to many of us by giving this performance. Thanks are due to the sponsors of the music department, which sponsored the program.

NSA Officers Meet to Discuss Plans

A meeting of the NSA's newly elected officers was held Monday evening in the Connecticut College students' new NSA's policies and activities to a program discussed by the new officers. Less, regional co-chairmen of international activities and head of staff for the Connecticut College projects. Estelle Parsons, who returned last weekend from Ute regional meeting in Boston, re- ported to the NSA's officers, and new activi- ties to be taken up.

Results of elections, conducted last weekend, were as follows: Rohs Meister, domestic science; Meister, international activities chairman; Mary Bundy and James Van Winkle, campus representatives; Mary Menghini, secretary; Grace Lurky, treasurer; and James Van Winkle, Ross, relief chairman.

Integrating of Atomic Energy will be one of the domestic committee's first accounts. They hope to inform the other organizations with organizing in doing so to give them additional information. Bob Smith, national vice-president of the clubs, spoke in Amherst a few weeks ago, has had an interview with President David W. Evans, in Amherst.

Unmarked the dehydrated, will be a meeting of both northern and southern New England college clubs in Boston university the weekend of December 6 and 7. A point workshop of the two regions will be planned, sponsored by the council of campus representatives. Of this club, who wishes to attend the meeting as a delegate to the council of campus representatives. There will be more details on the meeting in later NEWS issues.

Senior Day (Continued from Page Three)

In hand, filed solemnly in. Finally came the prophet herself. Roberts took her scripture lesson from the 1948 psalms accord- ing to Chlophyll, the saint and martyr, who underwent a 4-year captivity in the land of blue jeans. It was a promised land of fraternity pins and intellectual prowess. Chlophyll faced many trials and tribulations. "She bent her up- on her typewriter and at length saw "Senior Day.""

Federalists Federalist

At the suggestion of the delegate in the Montevallo convention held in Switzerland this summer, the convention voted to ally United States Federalists as a member group in establishing the world movement of World Federalists to encompass government organizations from twenty-seven other nations.

Now, as members of the World Student Federalists, we are committed to work on an international level. An international committee has already been established to contact foreign students here and abroad in order to foster the development of federalist groups in other countries. We urge you to participate fully in this coordination.

Is there a solution?

In answer to the cry for a concrete statement of what we mean by a world government, delegates proved that their feet were on the ground even if their heads were in the clouds. In addition to principal spokesmen such as membership, reservation of powers, enforcement of world law, balanced representation, and a bill of rights, the policy committee recommended definite powers as essential to a proposed world government.

At the speakers banquet held Saturday night, Dr. Harrison Brown of the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists, read a special message to the convention from Dr. Albert Einstein, who stated, "The trustees of the University of Pennsylvania are convinced that a world government is necessary to the security and possible advancement of the human race."

In the spirited reception which followed, every issue characterized the coordination. [Clam of every issue characterized the coordination.

Saber & Spur Had Tryouts Thursday For New Members

Last Thursday afternoon, twenty-five girls tried out before a group of judges for membership in the Saber and Spur. They were asked to demonstrate their ability by a number of different methods, among which were to walk, trot, and canter without their stirrups. The girls were judged, not only on the fulfillment of these requirements, but also on their control, form, security, hands, and enthusiasm. The club will meet sometime this week to decide upon the candidates, and they will be notified as soon as possible.

Aside from the recent try-outs, the club has been engaging in their weekly team practice and planning new activities. At their last meeting it was decided that the Saber and Spur would sponsor a large all-school, formal horse show sometime in the late spring the date for it will be announced sometime after Christmas.

Liz Smith, as Precious Stream, personified consistently the typical Chinese lady, despite all her ships which she is forced to undergo. Yet she demonstrated a sense of independence which was undoubtedly fostered by her mother, aptly interpreted by Jast of Regattas.

Bernard Rosen, his Excellency Wang Yun, buffeted his way along convincingly in constant juxtaposition with his lively spouse. Harold Shumway, as the versatile Hsieh Ping-Kuei, his band of Precious Stream, carried his male lead to a finitely successful conclusion, although his receptivity to all demands in distress was not completely convincing at all times.

The two sisters of Precious Stream, Silver Stream and Gold Stream, added color and life to the family picture. Mary Hyes Hasting's straight-faced remarks were caught beautifully by the audience every time. Margaret and Farnsworth's support was admirable and her ability backstage direction of make-up made her participation two-fold.

The contrast of the Princess of the Western regions, who was played by Helen Fong, who delivers a definite and well done role. Her manner of speech, and stance directly contradicted the more graceful actions of Liz Smith.

As the husbands of the two eldest daughters of the Yung family, Norman McGee and John John, were a more or less match for their wives. Humorous incidents were a more or less interesting endeavor. Marlis Busch, our Honorable Reader, continues to set the tone of what was to come to the audience's satisfaction.

Inasmuch as the scenery depended solely upon a backdrop and the audience's imagination, the properties, costumes, and make-up bespeck their own effectiveness in creating color and authenticity.

Minar

those the busy stage-hands kept bringing on and off.

Thus the same bare stage served as the prime minster's garden and a poor man's cave with very convenient set of circumstances for an amateur performance. One fears that the acting was not in general very good, but this was mostly overlooked in the good spirits of the occasion and in amused enthusiasm at the naive use of stage convention.

A supreme dramatic experience would never have been possible, for the audience was apparently in some doubt (as the present reviewer saw) as to the extant to which the author and his spirit was to be aware of the immediate realities, to the sacrifice of dramatic illusion.

But in any case Lady Precious Stream is hardly a great play, measured by Western standards. It is actually a romantic melodrama dealing with characters noble and rich beyond the experience of the spectators, in wonderful and sometimes remote settings.

The resolution of the plot depends upon the extremely improbable fact that the hero happens to shoot down a duck carrying a message tied to it by his wife, hundreds of miles away, and decides, after eighteen years, to revisit her. To be sure, the duck provokes him by crying continually: "Hsieh Ping-Kuei is unfaithful." The characters cater to the wishes of the humble spectator by eating and drinking well and wearing gorgeous costumes. The hero is a poor beggar who gains great wealth and power, and the villain is a great, though stupid, general who, in keeping with the tradition of melodrama, becomes a comic character.

The characterization in this performance was simple and well throughout. But in light of the general lack of realism and the heavy stylization, one sometimes felt misgivings as to whether a bit of excited stage-business or a coy infection were perhaps out of place.

A special word of praise should go to Elizabeth Smith as Precious Stream, who, like Janet Regattas, as the mother, attained a good balance between individuality and stylization.

Mary Haven Hasty, as Silver Stream, like her husband and un-sympathetic and therefore comic character, was excellent with her swarthy manner and "minding gait."

Wig and Candle is to be congratulated on having followed the play production class in introducing to the college community an authentic performance of dramatic material of real value and interest which is off the beaten path.
