Officials arrest alleged student rapist

by Rebecca Flynn

In the culmination of an investigation that began in September, New London police have arrested an 18-year-old first-year student on September 14 and a 19-year-old student shortly before Spring Break 1992, according to the affidavit on file at the New London Superior Court.

John Gesmundo of Bolton, Connecticut, has been charged with two counts of first-degree sexual assault for allegedly raping an 18-year-old first-year student on September 14 and a 19-year-old student shortly before Spring Break 1992, according to the affidavit on file at the New London Superior Court.

Gavitt of the New London Police Department has been investigating this case since September, when a first-year student filed a complaint with police alleging that she had been raped by an acquaintance.

According to Gavitt, the investigation expanded when another woman levied a complaint against the man identified in the affidavit as Gesmundo.

This second young woman alleges that she was sexually assaulted by Gesmundo in the previous spring.

First degree sexual assault, a Class B felony, carries a penalty of between 10 and 25 years in prison.

Director Spike Lee does "the right thing"

by Susan Perer
Feature Editor

The explosive director of Do the Right Thing and Malcolm X will be this year's keynote speaker for Black History month. On February 11, Spike Lee will speak in Palmer Auditorium to an anticipated packed house.

Gerard Choucroun, chair of the Student Activity Council, said that Lee's agent confirmed this date last semester during exam week.

Said Choucroun, "I expect a pretty full house. I don't want to turn any Connecticut College students away." Students must present their college I.D. in order to purchase tickets; there is a limit of two tickets per L.D.

Choucroun and representatives from UMOSA, Students Organized Against Racism, IPRIDE, La Undead and Connecticut College Asian Student Association met last fall to discuss the selection of a speaker.

"We decided to combine our resources, money, ideas and people to work together for cultural programs for campus," said Choucroun. "In the past SAC and Unity clubs have been isolated. We figured we'd combine resources to see what we could do," said Choucroun. The event is part of black history month, which is one of the reasons that Choucroun agreed on the February date.

Said Choucroun, "We wanted a big speaker. In the past SAC has had a cultural account which has allowed good speakers to come to campus. People like Nina Totenberg are good speakers but unknown to the average Connecticut.

Dean of faculty resigns amid faculty pressures

by Jon Finnimore
The College Voice

Dorothy James, former dean of the faculty and provost, resigned in January from her second highest position in college administration, marking the end of a campaign initiated last semester by discontented faculty colleagues.

James, who was granted tenure when she first arrived as dean in 1988, is taking a study break this semester, according to official statements released by the college. She is slated to return as a full-time professor in the Government Department next fall.

Difficulties between James and a number of professors started last semester when the process led to James' resignation, said Helen Reave, chair of the Faculty Steering Committee and Chair of Russian Studies.

"Approximately 25 faculty members, who had somehow been stymied by certain problems, began talking among themselves," Reave said.

"Those faculty were very concerned about the relationships between their department and the dean of faculty."

Some professors went to Reave and the FSSC, the committee that serves as a representative voice of the faculty, to express their concerns, said Reave.

"FSSC tried to diffuse the situation and get a sense of consultations going," she said.

In an attempt to raise the issue with the administration, professors also wrote letters of concern to William Niering, acting president of the college last semester and provost of faculty.

"There was some discontent last semester, and some professors wrote letters expressing their discontent," Niering said.

Communication strikes and distrust between some administrators and some faculty members have been in the college community's news for some time now.

Professor Gezari offers clarifying rebuttal to assertions regarding Sexual Personae

The following letter was sent to Camille Paglia, Director of College Relations, Connecticut College.

I have received your letter of December 7.

Let me see if I understand this correctly. Your academic correspondence from the president of Connecticut College is being written by the director of public relations. Letters from professors addressed to the president of Connecticut College are being answered by the director of public relations. The selection of academic lecturers is being timed and made by the director of public relations. The selection of academic commentary on a Yale Press scholarly book was done by the director of public relations. Yet nothing in this pattern of separation, my instinct would call it a "publicity ploy." The wildly distorted and defamatory comments made about Sexual Personae by Connecticut College faculty—who called it "hate-literature, as bad as Mein Kampf" or "David Duke"—are merely, in your words, "lively debate." I imagine you will have a similarly cheerful interpretation of the remarks of your director of women's studies on women. In fact, she boldly declared that I am not conquering the excesses of academic feminism but challenging "posing women." I am afraid all this looks to me, and to a lot of other people, like Stalinism. Same disinformation, ignore lies as as an ardent women's studies establishment concerned not with intelligence or learning but only with protection of the status quo. I do not understand the difference between debate and defamation. It was the students who saved my book at Connecticut College. Your letter simply provides more evidence that Connecticut College has some serious problems and (literally, this fall) a leadership vacuum.

Sincerely,
Camille Paglia

Some potential pitfalls for the politically correct

Political correctness has carved a new vocabulary within the academic community. The new language reflects a more specific and precise recognition and respect of ethnicity and ancestry of the American population. Blacks are "African Americans," whites are "European Americans," and females are referred to as "women" rather than girls.

Word choice in everyday language has become the object of scrutiny and constant attention; the categorizations and labels for different factions themselves have come to indicate and reflect respect, or lack thereof. Those who violate the parameters of this politically correct vocabulary are accused of radical, bigoted, or stubborn and intransigent. As far as the "P.C." advocates are concerned, these rebels without causes, and are largely without vision or moral consciousness within the context of an aware and open-minded imitation.

While the politically correct represent a force for change and diversity awareness, and are very powerful, they are potentially very dangerous. Language, while it is a crucial component of society, is not a perfect or polished incarnation of one's thoughts and ideas.

The ultimate import of words and phrases has come to indicate and reflect reality and awareness, even embody major theme, and power and oppression. What is most dangerous about this scenario is that this language can effectively be used to shackle real action. Although most people match their words with a genuine advocacy for equality, a self-righteous, hypocritical few use the accepted language as justification for smugness and complacency, and for ex-umption from action. They do not practice what they preach—they merely preach, and, in doing so, condone upon the supposedly "less enlightened" or "ignorant" masses.

Language is a tool for expression and a vehicle for ideas. However, it is given primary or ultimate consideration, it displaces the meanings behind the ideas themselves. Political correctness does have merit in that it provides a more accurate and sensitive version of reality. However, the language itself is not reality. Again, it is a tool which, along with moral perception and the senses, interprets and conveys reality.

For example, if one gets caught up in exactly what kind of hammer someone is using, he or she is neglecting to look at the entire structure that has been built. Clearly the building is the more significant and lasting of the two, and warrants greater consideration and consideration.

Without meaning and directed intent behind it, politically correct language becomes merely a method of image control and manipulation of the system for personal gain. Look for the quality of what they preach and, if doing so, conceding upon the supposedly "less enlightened" or "ignorant" masses.

You, too, must play your part.

On a bright, clear day, Bill Clinton was inaugurated into office as the 42nd President of the United States in a ceremony which all but overshadowed the decaying South side of Washington just a few blocks away. Many feel that the best part of his speech was that it was "only" fourteen and a half minutes long. Others appreciated that he addressed the same issues which his campaign focused on — the middle class, health care, the unemployed, and proliferation. Others were not impressed — believing that the speech had no memorable quotations which one could chisel into marble or engrave into a plaque in years to come.

Instead, what is most dangerous about this scenario is that it is merely a tool which, along with moral perception and the senses, interprets and conveys reality. While the politically correct represent a force for change and diversity awareness, and are very powerful, they are potentially very dangerous. Language, while it is a crucial component of society, is not a perfect or polished incarnation of one's thoughts and ideas.

Teaching Institute motivates tomorrow’s educators of color

by Greg Hake
The College Voice

André Lee, a Connecticut College senior, last year headed an intensive program for gifted college juniors of color interested in becoming teachers in the social sciences or humanities.

The Institute for the Recruitment of Teachers in Andover, Massachusetts is a four-to-five week program, the goal of which is to combat the lack of minority educators in higher education. Students who are accepted receive a $1000 stipend and reimbursement for travel expenses.

Lee attributes the lack of minority educators to “socialized inferiority.” He said the feeling of inferiority often discourages minorities from continuing their education.

The Institute’s training is so successful that 69 percent of graduates go on to graduate school in programs aimed at Ph.D’s, and 98 percent of IRT graduates are awarded graduate fellowships with stipends.

The Institute trains students to “socialize” minority educators into “socialization.” The program is so successful that 90 percent of graduates continue their education.

The IRT program shows students what they have the power to earn a Ph.D. and become professors. The program takes students by the hand through the graduate school application process, which Lee said is relatively inaccessible to students of color.

Before they begin the program, students are assigned to their preparation studies. The program teaches students how to prepare for graduate school. Lee said the work is harder than in graduate programs. He said the main difference between college and graduate school is that graduate school stresses endurance.

IRT classes go straight from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m., when students start work on daily paper assignments. The Institute’s instructors stress a concise and critical writing style.

At IRT students read seven books and articles about minority issues.

A typical day includes morning seminars, which “no one can lose over $1 and another dollar you can own the day.”

The book contains poems about many past and present Connecticut College faculty and staff members.

In “A Tribute to Tink and George William,” Turner writes: “Tink is now a famous woman. While delaying George is just a Chairman. With all respect he’ll have to treat her. /And not berate, not carp, nor beat her./ We fondly hope that this election/Will not impair our George’s erection./Nor be a source of endless strife/Throughout a blameless married life.”

by Susan Feuer Features Editor

The Reverend Imani-Sheila Newsome-McLaughlin, the assistant dean for student affairs at the Boston University School of Theology was the guest speaker for the college’s ninth annual Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial service on Monday.

Newsome-McLaughlin based her sermon titled “And We Are Not Saved” on the prophet Jeremiah, as the scripture reading for the service was from Jeremiah 8:18-20 and 22. “Jeremiah was a reluctant prophet. He was called by God to preach and ran for his life,” she said.

“Jeremiah was preaching the truth with nobody listening. He was heartbroken. Heartbreak is worse than a broken heart. You know, you have a broken heart because the cute boy you like doesn’t like you. But heartbreak is worse,” she said.

She uttered these words, “The harvest is past, the summer is ended and we are not saved. In Jeremiah’s time, there were no supermarkets, no Seven Elevens. In a good year there would be flour, wheat and barley. In the summer there would be lemons, figs and grapes,” said Newsome-McLaughlin.

“Domestic violence rises with every economic woe. The friends that aren’t in college are dying of alcoholism and doing drugs and shooting each other. We’re kicking each other to the top. Racism has been disguised as a new democratic order,” said Newsome-McLaughlin.

“Today, our very survival depends on our ability to stay awake. We must transform this worldwide neighborhood into a brotherhood. Our hope is our resolute determination to seek the good. We can’t stay here forever. We have to graduate. I know we look bad but there’s hope,” she said.

The Reverend ended her sermon by saying, “We are going to be in this together. We must not be weary in tilling the good soil of this land. In this season it looks hopeless. It doesn’t seem there won’t be another season.”

Newsome-McLaughlin, an ordained minister in the African Methodist Church, is the first African-American to hold her position at Boston University. She said she got married in September of 1992 and her husband was in the congregation.

Great College student."

“Unity clubs get similar funding for lectures; the attendance for these lectures has been fine, but there’s never been the majority of the campus there. We’ve never had a huge name speaker, except for Sarah Weddington,” said Choucroun.

“Our meetings were not ‘Let’s get Spike Lee’ but ‘Who should we get,'” said Choucroun. They all agreed on Spike Lee.

“Said Choucroun, “As far as major figures in American society who do speaking tours, Spike Lee is pretty big. There’s not many more outspoken or well spoken people than Spike.”

He said, “We wanted to generate discussion. We wanted to get people there. It’s a question of getting people talking and thinking about issues of race in America.”

Allison Form, co-chair of SOAR, said, “We wanted Spike Lee because he’s very controversial; he’ll draw a lot of people. Spike Lee is a fantastic speaker. I’ve heard. I think it’s important that we educate people. This will educate people.”

Jenry Fuss, also co-chair of SOAR, said, “I’m excited about him coming. Although he’s somewhat controversial, I like the way he does his films. His films deal with things that a lot of people aren’t really willing to look at or accept.”

Said Choucroun, “We won’t know the cost of the event until every ticket is sold. It’s a significant amount of money, probably around $12,000.”

The funds that are generated from the event will be earmarked for another event, the cultural festival that SAC and the Unity clubs are planning.

The event will be held in April, but “is still in the planning stage,” said Choucroun.

Tickets will be sold for this event through Palmer box office and are scheduled to go on sale on Monday for students. Tickets for Connecticut College students are $3; tickets for non-students are $8 and will go on sale a week from Monday. Palmer Auditorium has 1,998 seats.

Chef Newsome-McLaughlin based her sermon on the book Where Do We Go From Here, published in 1969. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. wrote of a great world noise. Since he wrote this, our world has become smaller. This season it looks hopeless. It doesn’t seem there won’t be another season.

Weidmann named Vice President for Development and College Relations

by Jennifer LeVan
Associate News Editor

K. Timothy Weidmann has been selected to replace Steve Culbertson as the Vice President for Development and College Relations. The replacement has been effective since January 25, 1993 following an interest search by a committee consisting of students and faculty who worked closely with Steve Culbertson.

Paul Weissman, the trustee who heads the board’s development committee said, “We are strongly behind Tim Weidmann. We are enthusiastic about attracting such a thoughtful and successful leader for our office, especially as we move to connect the College and triple our endowment.”

Weidmann’s past experience includes four years of fundraising at Yale where he solicited gifts for a $125 million Campaign for the Medical School. He also has been responsible for staff funding for the school, the creation of a Board of Visitors, and the Office of Corporate Relations during the five-year period.

Weidmann also has been responsible for staff funding for the school, the creation of a Board of Visitors, and the Office of Corporate Relations during the five-year period.

Weidmann said, “I let the search committee put forward my name for this position because I was clear from the media and what my colleagues were saying that Connec- ticut College was on the move.”

Gaudiani said: “Connecticut College’s excellent record of fund raising and its national profile make this position an outstanding opportunity, and we attracted well-qualified, experienced candi- dates from across the country. The finalists we interviewed met our criteria fully and the position was highly contested.”

Weidmann said, “I accepted the job because I was impressed by the dedication that the Connecticut College board members, alumni and staff showed to the college’s vision of liberal arts education. The Development and College Relations staffs are capable, enthusias- tic and dedicated, and I am eager to work along with them toward the ambitious goals for the college that they share.”

In his position at Connecticut College, Weidmann will oversee a nine-member communications offices and a fundraising staff of 25. This includes his personal direc- tion in Northwestern’s Campaign for Medical Research and the Life Sciences. This campaign had raised $65.7 million, 104 percent of its goal, when it finished in Novem- ber. He was also responsible for the direction of the $30 million campaig- n for engineering and other sciences at Northwestern.

Weidmann said, “I let the search committee put forward my name for this position because it was clear from the media and what my colleagues were saying that Con- necticut College was on the move.”

Two women allege sexual assault

Weidmann’s attorney, F. Mac Buckley of Hartford, has stated that Gesmundo will enter a plea of not guilty, according to the New Lon- don Day.

The Day also reported that Buckley will have his defense based on whether or not the young women willingly engaged in sexual activity with Gesmundo, stating, “There’s a very clear question of consent.”

The affidavit states that the first year student who submitted the Dec- ember 29 statement was a student on September 13 in a friend’s dormi- tory room. The document states that both the woman and Gesmundo were involved in intramural Flag Football and that “The interest in the sport was the com- mon factor in their acquaintance.”

The affidavit states that Gesmundo invited the woman to his room to discuss the sport, that they are on the Crystal Mall and then returned to his dorm room. According to the affidavit, they mutually engaged in kissing on his bed, but the alleged victim either- tried to block his attempts to touch other parts of her body or told him to stop. The court document stated that he continued despite her pro- tests, penetrated her and engaged in intercourse.

The affidavit records the obser- vation of another student who saw the woman afterward and said she had a “strange, sad, and upset” look on her face. A student advisor at the college described the woman as “upset, shaking, and fighting back tears” when disclosing the inci- dent.

The woman went to the hospital the next day and filed a compliant alleging date rape with the NLPD. Gesmundo was confronted by police at approximately 5:30am and made to understand the nature of the charge against him. Gauvin reported in the affidavit that Gesmundo “appears uncon- trolably,” upon hearing of the alle- gation. He later went to the infirmary “for his uncontrollable shak- ing.”

A second affidavit records the complaint of another young woman who has accused Gesmundo of sexually assaulting her. According to the affidavit, the two had been kissing in her room when he began to engage in sexual activity to which she objected. The defendant told the woman to stop, but he ignored her objections.

After being booked at the police station, Gesmundo was arraigned the morning of December 30 where Judge Michael D. Hurley set his bond at $10,000, a rate of $5,000 for each charge against him. His attorney, Angelo and Carol Gaudiani, attended the proceedings.

According to The Day, Buckley said Gesmundo has been aware of the charges for four months before which time Buckley’s law office has remained in contact with the NLPD twice a week to discuss the issue.

The resignation was deter- mining in land up for the institution, and said the solution would serve the college’s “imme- diate and long range needs.” A search committee has been established tentatively, but both Revere and Gaudiani said it has not been decided whether the search will be internal or nationwide.

Revere indicated that the faculty could have appointed a Provost from a Connecticut College professor.

“We want our dean of the faculty to know the past and present of the college. We would like an insider with that knowledge of the institu- tion and with that kind of vision and that kind of energy that will work for change,” she said.

She declined to speculate on po- sible candidates at this time, but did say, “The faculty is talking.”

Reeve said the dean of faculty position has many responsibilities and a number of imposing tasks in the next few years, such as General Education reform, dealing with a greater influx of part-time instructors and a marked increase in faculty grant writing.

Gaudiani also acknowledged that the new dean of faculty will be expected to enhance existing ef- forts at the college, saying, “What we want and I’m sure the students as well, is a well-develop- ed office with a strong person to continue the work we’re doing.”

Gaudiani also acknowledges that the new provost will not either already have or be granted tenure.

“With the general interest, the case that people coming in at the dean of faculty level from the out- side wouldn’t come in without ten- ure,” she said. “I believe it would be crazy because they would be abandoning a tenured slot.”

Gaudiani explained: “The search committee will be composed of two students, two administrators, one trustee, and a group of students, the sciences, the humanities and the social sciences.

The Connecticut College admin- istration, under Gaudiani’s leadership, has prided itself publicly on its commitment to teaching. Key academic administrators, including Robert Hampton, dean of the col- lege, Louise Brown, dean of men, and Joan King, former asso- ciate dean of the college, have taught one course a semester throughout their administrations.

Gaudiani, herself, tries to teach one class a year.

Dorothy James, a professor of the Africana studies department, has taught her last class in the spring of 1991 and Gaudiani both attributed this to “the tremendous demands” that have been placed on James in office.

“She did the best she could and given the the workload for her, as was heavily dependent on her, seemed best [to postpone teach- ing],” Gaudiani said.

James is scheduled to return to the college in the fall as a full-time faculty member.
Paper outlines plan for general education

by S.IoMa

The College Voice

A document, prepared for publication by Claire Gaudiani, president of the college, highlights her vision for curriculum reform and liberal arts education, including a required two-week public speaking and negotiation course for freshmen and sophomores. The paper is especially relevant as Connecticut College embarks on efforts to redefine general education.

Gaudiani also expressed support for senior public speaking, stating, "I believe that all seniors should have a senior culminating experience, an experience to draw together all that they've learned."

According to Gaudiani, the plan needs to be "a mix of what the faculty's best wisdom about what you need to know, both in terms of knowledge and skills, and then your best lights about what you need to know to express your fullness."

"I believe all seniors should have a culminating experience... an experience to draw together all they've learned."

—Claire Gaudiani, president of the college

Gaudiani recently revised a paper on plan for "general education for global interdependence," titled "For a New World, A New Curriculum."

According to Gaudiani, this plan was not drawn up for Connecticut College. Rather, Gaudiani expressed the hope that the plan would initiate dialogue in the higher education community.

Asked whether she would like to see her plan implemented at Connecticut College, Gaudiani said, "I'd be perfectly delighted if members of this community would like to play with pieces of it," but did not specify which elements she would accept and which she would not.

The plan outlined in Gaudiani's paper has not been submitted to the Educational Planning Committee for consideration in Connecticut College's general education revisions.

Savanna Dhall, chair of academic affairs, said "It's not something we [EPC] feel the need to discuss because it has not formally come to the EPC. We have not been approached in any way."

Next semester, proposed in the plan include non-credit required two week intensive instruction in public speaking and negotiation skills for freshmen and sophomores.

These students would continue to build two weeks early in January to be trained by professionals in public speaking and negotiation skills.

During the last semester, students would also be expected to undergo oral or written reviews which answer questions such as, "What is the purpose of education?" and "What is my role in an educated citizen in a globally interdependent community?"

This plan calls for a curriculum with four courses forming a "required common core." These courses center on four areas of knowledge: human culture, ethics, the environment in its global context, and the forces that created the emergence of the world's present economic, political, and social structures.

These courses are aimed at exposing students to "a different kind of learning experience and a different mode of inquiry." For the elective core, 10 courses would be chosen from four areas: the natural sciences, U.S. culture and society, world culture and society, and creative expression.

To achieve a "basis of communication and analytical skills, the plan requires courses for "writing across the curriculum."

A writing portfolio would be kept throughout the four years at the dean's office. Students select three of their strongest writings for every four-year, trained faculty. Should the faculty members see a "deficiency in writing skills," then, the student would be required to take a non-credit tutorial during the fall of senior year.

The plan also includes underwriting for publication at some national education journals.

Hennessey cited the fact that clubs without SGA funding are unable to hang posters in the post office or sign out rooms for meetings.

Sean Spicer, house senator of J.A.C., described the issue of a Right to Life Club as "a heated issue" and said that the recognition the club seeks goes beyond the funding which it needs.

Sarah Huntley, the publisher of The College Voice, then suggested the club name proposed by the club: "For a New World, A New Curriculum."
Proposed budget cut will limit already weak counseling program

By Glen Bronner
The College Voice

The recent budgetary belt-tightening, which is affecting all administrative services, threatens the quality of the counseling program at Connecticut College. The cut College's already limited counseling program.

A five percent budget cut would further limit the resources available to students seeking counseling help.

The existing staff of only one full-time counselor already suffers from a lack of funds, and with the construction of the Strategic Budget Plan, Laura Hesslin, director of Counseling Services, fears that counselors will receive even less attention, and will slip to the lower end of the budget scale.

Robin Swimmer, SGA vice president and vice president of the counseling advisory committee, addressed the lack of counseling available within the college. She pointed out the lack of counseling services at the Student-Te: Liaison committee meeting in November.

Some of the trustees approached me after the meeting and were surprised to learn that this school has a counseling program. There is no prominence place in the Strategic Plan for counseling,” said Swimmer.

Further budget cuts may cause even more students to seek help elsewhere. The school's resources can provide help for many students. Fortunately, in addition to the school's resources, students can find help elsewhere. The school's resources can provide help for many students. Fortunately, in addition to the school's resources, students can find help elsewhere.

The school continues to say that they will address the problem, but they never do. By the time each senior class is graduated, 25 percent of those seniors have received counseling at one point in their career.”

Kenerson and Peabody share dual administrative position

by Michael Delli'Angelo
News Editor

Esther Kenerson, former administrative assistant, and William Peabody, manager of maintenance, will share the duties of the director of operations in a unique dual position.

Lynn Brooks, vice president for finance, made the decision to promote Kenerson and Peabody, and said he always looks to promote from within because it "often is effective."

Brooks also said, "Look[ing] inside first advances a person's career path and opportunities." Brooks consulted Jane North, director of human resources and Judih Kimmng, affirmative action officer, when making his decision.

Brooks said Kenerson and Peabody have proven themselves to be responsible and effective employees.

Kenerson, now coordinator for finance and work order control, will work to improve customer service within Physical Plant.

"She will monitor customer requests and field special requests," taken on more responsibility while Peabody oversees the maintenance oriented side of Physical Plant including Jim Lewis, Grounds and Jeff Bewlcy.

"She will monitor customer requests and field special requests," said Brooks.

Kenerson, who has been with the college for seven and a half years, said the dual positions "symbolize the cooperation and teamwork at physical plant."

Kenerson and Peabody, who have worked together since Peabody came to the college three and a half years ago, both stressed the importance of teamwork.

According to Kenerson, the shift in leadership did not come as a drastic change to physical plant employees who have long dealt with the team in a similar capacity.

The new directors already have taken on more responsibility while maintaining their old duties. Peabody describes the experience as an "expansion of his view" which he hopes to use to "improve service."

Peabody oversaw the maintenance oriented side of Physical Plant including Jim Lewis, Grounds and Jeff Bewlcy.

Peabody said that by turning director of operations into a dual position, Physical Plant will continue to provide personal service in an increasingly difficult area. Physical Plant can continue to tailor its operations to suit the colleges specific needs, said Peabody.

At a time when many schools are turning to outside contractors to fill their work orders Peabody and Kenerson hope to provide more personal service and commitment to quality.

With two people on the job, one covering for the other when necessary, they can more easily keep on top of things.

The arrangement provides a better opportunity for the college to expand its operations by working on special events and conventions without sacrificing its commitment to the college, said Peabody.

Ed Hoffman, former director of Operations, announced his retirement before winter break. Hoffman left the college temporarily to undergo hip replacement surgery on November 23.

When Hoffman recovers from surgery, he will work with Brooks as a special assistant on a variety of assignments until his retirement becomes effective on June 30, 1993.

“Pepper Bomb” adds spice to “80’s” party

by Mike Delli'Angelo
News Editor

A respiraion irritant was released in Lamberton living room on Saturday, January 30.

The substance, described by some as a "pepper bomb," was released at approximately 1:55 am.

The sophomore class was hosting an "80’s" party at the time the incident occurred. The party was scheduled to end at 2:00 am.

The irritant is believed to have come from the middle stairwell near Harris Refactory.

The substance travelled up the stairwells to the second, third and fourth floors.

The New London Fire Department was not notified of the incident because it was not an emergency. He has, however, confirmed reports with local police.

The New London Fire Department was not called. Campus Safety investigators began calling the Fire Department.

The substance was apprehended, nor does Campus Safety have any suspects. An investigation is being conducted.

Special Olympic press conference to be held

by Jennifer LeVan
Assticute News Editor

A press conference will be held at the Charles B. lace Field House to announce that the Connecticut Special Olympics will hold their Summer Olympic Games in New London.

The Games have been held in New Haven for the past few years, but over 15,000 athletes, including two New Londoners, will be heading to New London on June 11-13 for the 23rd annual Games.

The press conference will begin the recruitment of 8,000 corporate and community volunteers needed to run the competition. Over 2,000 volunteers from almost every city in the state will compete in track and field, gymnastics, soccer, aquatics, 4-square, basketball, tennis, cycling and equestrian.

Connecticut College, the U.S. Coast Guard Academy, Mitchell College, the U.S. Naval Submarine Base in New London, and High Hopes Therapeutic Riding, Inc. in New London will be the five host sites for the competition.

The Summer Games will help showcase the community spirit of New London and Southeastern Connecticut as known for," said New London Mayor William Saut. "We have a challenge to create an atmosphere that is both competitive and fun for the athletes, their families and the volunteers, and we're ready to work."

The Connecticut Special Olympics will begin the press conference with a mile torch run to symbolize the transfer of the games from New Haven to New London.

The torch was carried on foot and by horse where the mayor of New London, Bill Saut, welcomed the Special Olympics to New London.

The press conference will be held in New Haven for the past few years, but it will be coming to New London for the first time in May 1995.

The Games in New London will serve as a stepping stone to the Special Olympics World Summer Games for many athletes.

The Games are scheduled for New Haven in 1995 and will be the world's largest athletic event in the world that year.
Dan Ackroyd plays the director who gets Chaplin started in movies in Hollywood and gives him his first opportunity to direct. Silent movies of this era, evocative American audiences with humor, love and excitement. Dan Ackroyd also has quite a list of movie credits, including Blues Brothers, Spies Like Us, GHOSTBUSTERS I and II, and appearances on Saturday Night Live.

Chaplin created the Little Tramp to fill a void and make a commentary on human existence. He ran against the U.S. government and was expropriated to Switzerland by the Federal Bureau of Investigations for communist activities which, according to the movie, were completely unfounded. Every movie has to have a girl and Chaplin has two: the FBI and the Nazis.

One of the best scenes in the movie occurs at a Hollywood party, where Chaplin verbally spars with a Nazi. Chaplin is accused of concealing his ethnicity, implying that Chaplin was Jewish. Chaplin retaliates with "I do not have that honor," (also in defense of his brother, who is Jewish) and then storms off.

Milla Jovovich plays one of Chaplin's wives—and has absolutely no substance. She adds nothing to the role, although it seems she was playing herself, a flighty, farseeking pseudo-acress.

Although Chaplin is a lengthy movie, it brings to life one of the movie greats. This is important for the twenty-something generation because we missed out on one great entertainer who lived during one of the great American movie eras.

The Little Tramp finally speaks in Chaplin the movie

With much fanfare, the movie Chaplin was released over Winter break, starring Robert Downey Jr., Dan Ackroyd, and Milla Jovovich. It chronicles the life of Charlie Chaplin from his early childhood to his final years in Switzerland with his third wife Uma O'Neill and his children.

The story is told through the eyes of Chaplin, whose autobiography served as the main source for the film. The different settings are introduced via an editor (who does not actually exist), but was a creative device introduced to give the viewer the ability to jump around Chaplin's life.

It also goes into detail about Chaplin's relationship with his mother, who was placed into a mental institution, when Chaplin was a young man, and his brother, who was his personal manager throughout his career. The movie tries to take on the 94 years of Chaplin's life by introducing various characters, such as Chaplin's first love, the cover of a showboat and others.

The director, Sir Richard Attenborough, also directed the movie Gandhi. He has the experience to take on the life of such an interesting character and presents the audience with all aspects of Chaplin's life: his loves, movies, political thoughts and family life.

Robert Downey Jr. gives the best performance of his acting career. He has portrayed various characters in movies like, Weird Science, Chances Are, Soap Dish, Air America, and Less Than Zero.

Downey plays Chaplin with an ease and vitality that has been missing from movies for the past few years. The movie is very long, but has an intensity that captures the audience for the entire production.
Exhibit in Cummings highlights women and art

How many of you have ever seen a movie and left the theater wishing you could be that person on screen? Or have had dreams of being a singer or accomplishing the impossible? Most importantly, how many of you wake up in the middle of the night wondering if that thing was worth it? Well, then, it is for you that I say:

Calling all singers! Calling all actors! Calling anyone interested in participating in the 1993 Connecticut College Musical Theater production of Musical & Shire's Closer Than Ever!

The characters are quite colorful. A man contemplating his obsessive actions due to his love for a woman, a man thinking that he can break up with a woman and just be friends, and a man wondering if he made the correct decisions in his life, are just a few of the characters that grace the stage during this two act musical based on the lives of real people. This show is not about men in mask or people trying to escape the crimes of their past. This show is about us, the people who have to pay fifty bucks to see Guys and Dolls in Boston because we have no choice. The show was originally performed with a cast of four: a soprano, also, tenor and bass, but the overabundance of talent at Connecticut College, the director has decided not to limit herself to four, but expand the cast to 15 or more. So you shouldn't fear that the cast is too small for you, because you never know.

The show will be performed on April 25, 26 and 27. Auditions will be held in Cummings 224 on Friday from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 9 p.m., and Saturday 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. The sign-up sheet is in Larabee by the snack shop door. You need only sign-up for one.

Rachel Schwartz, director of the show, said, "Anyone can audition, especially if they are interested in working with any production aspect of the show: painting scenery, or the creative end of publicity, or even if they just want to be involved . . . but if they are interested in auditioning they should have a show that they feel comfortable with and a one minute monologue prepared."

So anyone interested in performing in the show, or who are just curious, should either sign-up in Larabee, or call Rachel at 8555 or Stephanie at 4162.

I strongly advise you though, it is a decision you will never forget.
Hockey dominates
Wesleyan in 6-1 win

By Matt Burke
Amherst Sports Editor

Temperatures were in the low sixties as the week began in southern Connecticut. It seemed like a perfect time to dust off the golf clubs or softball bats and enjoy the outdoor sporting life. By the end of the week, however, the weather resembled the Arctic more than New England, and more fitting sports were skiing and hockey. Appropriately enough, hockey was exactly what was played at Dayton Arena on Friday night and at Wesleyan on Saturday afternoon by Conn men’s team. They were responding to Salem State’s aggression and responded with three straight tallies to go up 3-1. Matt Cann tied the game on assists from Dustin Beatty and Skip Miller at 13:41, and gave his team the lead four minutes later with the help of Dan Fox. Shortly thereafter, Chris Hawk scored to put the Camels up 3-1 on assists from Ben Smith and Rusty Stone. From that point on, however, the ice belonged to the visitors from the north. Salem State scored five goals in the second period to turn the game around. “We committed costly penalties,” said senior Matt Hopkins, explaining his team’s collapse in the middle period. “Killing them off tired us out,” he added.

While Conn had little success stopping Salem State on the power-play, they had even less success converting on their own. The final tally was 5-8-1 overall record and a 3-7-1 mark in their first year in the ECAC East West. The Camels need to make their move now. Although there is plenty of time before the weather warms up permanently, Conn has plenty of ground to make up.

Schmoozing unveils plan to revitalize Aspermac boxes

Opening Remarks

Hey kids, we’re back with one more semester of embellishments, fabrications, and half-truths (sound a lot like the Camels doesn’t it). We have to start off this opening issue by tipping our hats to two of Schmoozing’s favorite sons, Teddy Frischling, who just recently scored his 1,000th career point, God bless ya, Pops! Congratulations also to the other Enzy Wood who snared her 1,000th career rebound in action over the break. Teddy Frischling and Enzy Wood — together making the Camels the best they can be...

Frischling Unveils Secret to Academic Success

Speaking of Frischling, we have been entranced by the college administration to publicly release his fool-proof method to finding the courses at Conn with the minimum amount of substantive work. All one needs to do is to attend the course’s opening day class and keep an eye on the black board. If the professor keeps you for the entire class, Frischling says, “Throw that one right out.” If the professor keeps you for a half hour, an hour, one should be, “very apprehensive about enrolling.” Under a half hour, “you’ve found the right one.” An addendum to the above rules from Frischling is never to commit to a class with a syllabus of more than one page. Claire Gudisian has gone on the record for calling the Frischling method, “general procedure.” General Westmoreland calls it, “Innovative.” John Madden says, “I love it.” John Madden is apparently releasing a follow-up to his video program Where There’s a Will, There’s a Frischling. Congratulations also to Enzy Wood who snared her 1,000th career rebound in action over the break. Teddy Frischling and Enzy Wood — together making the Camels the best they can be...

The Legacy of Bryce Breen

It has now been eight months since the graduation of outstanding Conn student-businessman Bryce Breen, yet the Conn College campus still litters with Breen’s Blue Aspermac boxes. For those of you who don’t remember, Aspermac was the ill-fated campus video rental service that Breen founded last year. The blue boxes were placed around campus for convenient movie drop-off. Was Aspermac a brilliant venture falttering only due to a sluggish economy? Or was it simply the most awesome idea anyone has ever had at Conn? We’ll leave that for you to ponder with Chad Marlow. However, since Breen’s ugly blue metal boxes seem to be becoming as much an immovable part of our changing campus as the new A.C., the new Cro, Bob Thomas and Jon Wales at a keg, Dob and Pops felt we could do the campus a service by listing our TOP FIVE THINGS TO DO WITH AN ASPERMAC BOX (By the way, we know Top Ten lists are just about the most tired premise in written comedy these days, but we never claimed to be innovators — or funny for that matter.)

5. Raise hamsters
4. Dorm room for Mike Marchand or Rob Sumner
3. Tiny racquetball game
2. Turn them into a campus wide keg-a-lator network. Refreshing, ice-cold beer available 24-7.
1. With a little redesigning, they become the miniature foundation for Conn’s first fraternity/sorority house.

IM Update:

Hounds win in IM Floor Hockey

In an awesome display of floor hockey excellence, Martha Burchart and Louise Brooks teamed up for two goals with less than 8 minutes remaining to lift Hounds of Destruction to a 2-0 win over Socks with Sticks in the 1992 Intramural Women’s Floor Hockey championship.

Both teams had their chances, but the goaltending of Laura Moran (HOD) and Colby McDonough (SWS) kept the final scoreless until the relentless combo of Burchart and Brooks finally finished a 2 on 1 with 8 minutes left. Jon Eisenberg and Karen Mallegol put pressure on the Hounds’ goal, but they did not create as many quality chances as Burchart and Brooks.

Both teams had success in frustrat- ing their opponents’ abilities to create any consistent passing attacks. Dumping the puck up and out was the order of the day. Socks with Sticks’ backliners Sara Clion and Bridgette Beaudoin kicked away many Hounds’ rushes. Louise Brooks played excellent two-way hockey in leading the Hounds to victory.

Hounds of Destruction barely survived the semi, beating a determined SWS squad 3-2 in sudden death. Two first period goals by Priscilla Pizzi got SWS off to a 2-0 start. The scoring combo of Pizzi and the league’s all-time leading scorer, Lauren Tung, put consistent pressure on Hound’s goalie Lauren Moran, but could only ring up two scores.

Martha Burchart scored goals in the second and third stanzas to tie it in regulation. The winning goal, penalized as somewhat controversial, was credited to Burchart as she deflected Brooks’ pass from behind the net for the deciding tally.

Soccer with Sticks defeated last Tuesday’s year’s champs, Chicks with Sticks, in the semi-finals, squeaking by the Aerodynamic Monsters, 16-14, 15-13. Sara Bartholomew defeated her opponent in four games. Burchart and Louise Brooks victory.

Women’s Squash beats Mt. Holyoke

By Julie Grand
Sports Editor

By destroying Mt. Holyoke 8-1 last Saturday, and Wesleyan 7-2 last Tuesday, the women’s squash team has improved their record to 9-4 by winning seven out of their last ten matches.

In their match at Mt. Holyoke it was the depth of the team that really allowed Conn to dominate as everyone from the fourth seed down basically cleaned up in their matches, with all of them winning in just three games. At this number one spot on the ladder, co-captain Sara Bartholomew defeated her opponent in four games.

This was a big win for Bartholomew because it was her first time returning to the number one spot after the foot injury she suffered earlier in the season. She had missed the first two matches of the season and played at the number two spot when she first returned.

The team also moved Sandy Nicolls up one notch on the ladder to the number three spot and bumped co-captain Robyn Wallace down to the number four spot. Wallace easily won her match in three games while Nicolls suffered a tough five game loss. At the number two spot Margaret Shergalis struggled a bit before squeezing out a five game win in her match.

According to Bartholomew, this really helped the Camels in their victory last Saturday. “I think this [new ladder] really strengthens our team. After we’re more comfortable with it,” Bartholomew said.

Last Tuesday Conn was also victorious beating Wesleyan 7-2.

However, according to Wallace the score was not indicative of how the Camels played. “We won 7-2 but we really weren’t into it, and we didn’t play well,” Wallace said. But, Wallace also said the match provided incentive against Mt. Holyoke and helped Conn to become more team oriented and better disciplined in practices.

“We weren’t in order before, but now they are,” said Wallace. “I think this[match] really strengthens our team and we’re much more confident now.”

Two weeks ago the Camels defeated Mt. Holyoke in a tournament at Williams, but suffered losses in matches against Williams, Amherst and Vassar.

With the win, the team is confident for its matches at Wesleyan this Thursday and at home against Wesleyan this Saturday.

Women’s hoops rolls to 11-1, Wood grabs 1000th rebound

By Matt Bartolotti
Associate Sports Editor

As befits a diverse student body, there is no typical way for a Conn student to spend his or her winter vacation. Some may have basked in tropical rays on Caribbean beaches while others may have tested their dexterity and cold tolerance on the slopes of Vermont. Still others may have worked to make money, and some (believe it or not) may have continued academic pursuits. Finally, there is a percentage of the campus who, if asked what they did over break, would simply respond, “Nothing.”

Nothing, however, is exactly the opposite of what the Connecticut College women’s basketball team did during January. They continued their five-game winning streak into the new year to up their record to 8-1.

Even the resumption of classes could not derail their winning ways. A 75-60 victory over UMass-Dartmouth Tuesday, an 81-47 annihilation of Coast Guard Thursday, a one-point overtime win over Trinity Saturday, and a 62-59 triumph at Trinity last Saturday night improved the Camels’ record to 10-3.

All good things must come to an end, and winter break is unquestionably a good (and long) thing. The Camels were not overly distressed however, by the first day of classes, as evidenced by their performance on Tuesday against UMass-Dartmouth. The visitors stayed with Conn through most of the first-half when, trailing only 19-16 with 7:15 showing on the clock, the hosts began to pull away.

Mamie Sher (eight points on the night) converted on a fast-break lay-up to put her team up by five. A hook shot by Wnote (15 pts.) less than a minute later gave the Camels its largest lead of the half, 25-16. UMass-Dartmouth trailed 36-26 at the intermission, and 40-26 after Wood converted another basket two minutes into the second-half. The visitors were able to pull within five at the mid-way point of the half when Conn shots would not fall, but they came no closer. A jumper by C.J. Stuart (leading scorer with 18 pts.) with just under nine minutes to play gave Conn a 52-45 lead, and they never looked back. Despite the valiant attempts of the visitors to come back, the Camels avenged an earlier loss to the Bantams, before they resorted to man-to-man defense in the second half. A jumper by C.J. Stuart (leading scorer with 18 pts.) with just under nine minutes to play gave Conn a 52-45 lead, and they never looked back. Despite the valiant attempts of the visitors to come back, the Camels avenged an earlier loss to the Bantams, before they resorted to a “Box and One” defense which enabled them to guard one player especially tight, yet still collapse on the big men. Schoepfer used a 1-3-1 zone defense for the majority of the game, forcing the Bantams to take outside shots.

Conn jumped out to an early 7-2 lead. The Camels avenged an earlier 18 point loss to the Bantams, who represented loss number five in the losing streak. In last Tuesday’s game at Luce Fieldhouse, Conn lost to Coast Guard 68-67, as a Ted Frischling turn around jumper rimmed out in the waning seconds of the game.

Instead of reverting to the man-to-man defense because the Bantams were connecting from outside, “We wanted to play zone because they can’t shoot from the outside,” said Schoepfer. “Regardless of what happened we were going to stick with the zone.”
