Satyagraha Is Dead

Satyagraha is dead, after a long illness.

After spring vacation, the campus newspaper will return, but with a new name, a new format, and new ideas. We hope that by introducing several specific changes, the transition will be more of a superficial one.

1. We need a new name for our paper. Suggestions will be welcomed and a prize of two bottles of Boone's Farm Apple Wine will be awarded to the lucky winner. The decision of the editors will be final.

2. We want to enlarge the staff both in the sense of increasing the number of contributors and involving a greater number of people in actual publication.

3. We wish to emphasize creativity; poems and creative photography will be sought and used much more.

4. We encourage the contribution of essays and controversial columns.

5. We hope to include long-range investigative articles and expose.

Satyagrahawash

This issue of Satyagrahawash was meant only in good clean fun. Any reference to actual situations are purely coincidental, though intentional.

LETTER

To the Editors:

During tumultuous Spring of 1970 when unrest on the campus became the dominant theme of the College curriculum, a group of New England parents met in Boston largely because of their total dissatisfaction with the handling of Parent's Weekend. A group such as this, allowed limited in geographical makeup, would usually represent a cross-section of that body of influence. In part, in this case, the parents of Connecticut College undergraduates. It was only natural for them to wonder if their concerns were similar to those of parents from other parts of the country, causing them to offer their now famous "Questionnaire".

A substantial portion of parents, country-wide, strongly disapproved of what was going on at Connecticut College. This parents group, at all times dedicated itself to the perpetuation of the finest traditions and ideals of this College, met with the Board of Trustees of the College and submitted its findings. We made recommendations that, if fully implemented would have improved the confidence and trust of the parents in the College Administration.

The Administration, however, did not see fit to weigh and consider this effort and instead through means at times devious set out to arrest a momentum developed only for the benefit of a college in trouble.

In taking the action they did the Administration did not stifle the fire or cry but instead divided the troubled parent and the student. In spite of this, the Parents Association still made efforts to meet with the Administration and Trustees while refusing to submit their detailed findings to a national newspaper publication. The results of such action might have proved a terminal blow to a fine institution.

The handling of these situations proved to all concerned that a group of dedicated parents were actually a threat to an Administration whose permissiveness and lack of understanding of the colleges were becoming instrumental in the dangerous breakdown of the school's social order at a time when it needed the individual trust and support of all parents.

In spite of continued disregard, when the role of the Parents Fund Committee was expanded to the area which the Parents Association represents, we suggested to the Chairman of the Parents Fund that a cooperative effort be considered. We have received no acknowledgment.

The time has come for all segments of the Connecticut College community to take note. Many goals are common to both groups, in which case the best interests of Connecticut College may prevail.

The dissolution of the Parents Association is not in order. The experience it has undergone, the total effect it has achieved, the information it has acquired and the financial support and value it can offer are far too valuable to terminate by either dissolution or default.

The Administration should encourage the unification of these two efforts, thereby producing a beneficial effect that will add a much-needed stability to the College while, by their example becoming a model undertaking for the betterment of all education.

Sincerely,

PARENTS ASSOCIATION OF CONNECTICUT COLLEGE STUDENTS

(MARCH 15) Undisclosed sources have revealed that "an avant-garde group" at Connecticut College is divided into three platoons, and all three are subjected to an adjustment period necessary to familiarize the proletariat to the counter-revolutionary broadcast system called WRC. (Radio Free Connecticut), over which they plan to play filthy, disgusting anti-Marxist songs. They also plan to jam WCN.

A group of journalismally inclined students plan to put out a slightly-right-of-center newspaper of traditional format and modeled after the New York Times. (It also confined to the office of the head librarian, who is in the northeast corner of the second floor basement.) Portions of the interview have been published.

Librarian Defends Plans For Addition

Through no small amount of screeching and moaning, SATYAHOGASH was able to obtain an exclusive interview with the head librarian, Marjorie Lawrence '45. The interview was confined to the subject of the proposed library expansion. It was also confined to the subject of the head librarian, who is in the northeast corner of the second floor basement.) Attention! Connecticut Now Help To The Military Step!

by Marjorie Lawrence '45

"Attention! Seventy-five Connecticut College students and 200 newspaper reporters assembled at 4:20 this afternoon for a special course in the group. The class is learning the idea of receiving and obeying commands instantaneously. Miss Starwood, physical education director in charge of the group, is highly pleased with the attitude and enthusiasm shown by the girls. Lieut. Horton is "delighted and amazed" with their progress. Here is an opportunity to act as a member of a service company and at the same time be intensely aware of oneself as an individual. One false step or one disregarded command spoils the continuity of the group. Such training is good for the morale, physical exercise always being the figure.

Even the cadets pause on their jaunts up to C.C. dorms to watch the progress of their newest competitors!

Phys. Ed. Informer Dispels False Rumors

by Steve Berger

A lot of nasty rumors have been circulating recently about our Physical Education department. One rumor has it that starting next year, there will be an option given to all students of taking gym three sessions a week for two hours, or sessions of 2 hours, or sessions of 3 hours a week. This is totally untrue. The rational involved. Instead, we will have the choice of taking gym three sessions a week for 2 hours, or 2 sessions a week for 3 hours a session. This is absolutely false. To prove the rational of the rumor, Mr. Merson has ordered President Shain OUT of the court several times.

Another rumor has it that due to financial crisis the school is currently undergoing, the physical education department will be forced to take on only 3 additional members next year, instead of the proposed 5. This rumor is absolutely false. The department has maintained its request for 5 new members. Furthermore, they have proven to President Shain that this will help to save money. The reasoning is that by enlarging the present staff, the college will be insuring that all its graduates will be more physically fit. Since healthy bodies means healthy minds, then Cornell graduates will get better jobs, make more money, and thus give larger donations back to the school. So the college will be making money by spending it on the physical education department.

Several other rumors which are currently circulating also have to be dispelled. There is no truth to the rumors that Mr. Merson is planning to lock President Shain in the squash courts until he doubles her salary. This is absolutely false.

To prove the rational of the rumor, President Shain was ordered to leave the court several times.

The other, equally scandalous rumor is that Mr. Zimmerman has ordered dorm inmates to be evacuated, torn down, and demolished. This rumor sprang from the fact that Hamilton used a non-resident student in the intramural basketball tournament last week. There is absolutely no truth to this at all. Except for the fact that Hamilton will be excluded from all intramural participation for the rest of the century, there will be no additional repercussions.

There is one rumor around, however, that does seem to have some truth to it. This rumor is the one which has been related recently by an anonymous phys. ed. member. This rumor has it that all of these other rumors have been spread by a non-athletic type with Communist leanings, who has never participated in a gym class. Don't anybody worry, though. The department has devised a plan to find him out. By requiring all students to take strenuous personal fitness tests, all undesirables will be weeded out. As a result, the college will rid itself of this nasty rumor-spreader — whoever he is. It's all as simple as gym!

The J. Geils Band is the best album I've heard in some time. Made by six...nique rock and roll: it is also totally pretentious that usually mar this kind of thing.

In its energy, understanding, and execution, the album not only reminds me of the early Stones, but compares favorably with them.

Lead singer Peter Wolf has been as R&B fanatic since he can remember. Out of his knowledge of the music he has put together a truly personal and distinctive style that ape no one and expresses his point of view naturally. Guitarist J. Geils, on the other hand, came to R&B with a love for the music he has put together.

He is able to do justice to some of the best instances of this kind of loose, unobtrusive drums that are the cornerstone of this song style: "The bartender says 'doin' expertly and distinctively. The albums' two instrumentals, "Cruisin' For A Love" and "Pack One of various kinds including one jelly and personalized and honest as well. The singing and the rest of the arrangement are fine.

Finally, "On Borrowed Time" is a straight soul ballad, written by Wolf and Jastain. It is a highlight of the record and nowhere is the uniqueness of Wolf's singing and song style. "The bar-tender says you're demure and perfect, putting all at sound full, but direct and honest as well. Architecture and the rest of the arrangement are fine.

The nicest thing about this album and the band is the balance they have found between the personal and the formal. They have chosen to work with certain conventions and modes. At the same time, they have completely avoided the route of making it all sound easy.

"Cruisin' For A Love" and "Pack Fair and Square" are two straight blues done as well as it can be done. The harp dominates both with its perfect lines and tone while the guitar supports perfectly and takes the lead with force and control when it is called for. All of it harmonizes in the lyrics of the immortal joke Junio Jiminy: "I'm not on Broadway, cruisin' for a love again."

"Serre You Right to Suffer" displays the essence of the genius that has been developed. Even better is his ability to use the harp naturally and intelligently on material that would not normally call for its presence at all. Songs like "Wait." and "Homework" would normally rely on horns, but he does the job so skillfully that the listener never notices their absence.

Sel James plays a real piano as well as organ. Most of it is centered to rhythm playing but it is done expertly and distincively. Underneath everything Stephen Stills and Danny Klein provide the kind of house, unabashed drums and bass that are the compromises of R&B.

The album's two instrumentals, "Joe Breaker" (dedicated to Mario Modlin) and Albert Collins "See- Gone" are short and to the point. Everyone steps forward, blos a chorues, and steps back and lets the next jump. "See-Gone" has the shortest and one of the noisiest drum breaks I've heard lately.

"Wait" introduces us to the uniqueness of Wolf's singing and song style. "The bartender says you're demure and perfect, as I thought you saw my way. . . . Steve Cropper might well be accused of Geils' rhythm while the arrangement has the kind of sway to it that makes it all sound easy.

Conn. College Camels Humped By Sarah Lawrence

On Sat. March 15, the Conn. College Camels lost another close one to Sarah Lawrence, 66-22.

In the first half Sarah, with her defense down, was vulnerable to the powerful thrusts of the Camels' lay-ups. The second quarter ended with Brian Puglisi high scorer, and the Camels leading, 16-12.

An over-abundance of personal fouls worked against the Camels and Sarah bounced back, frustrating every drive by the Camels. Though persistent, the team was unable to convert their passes into a score and the Camels went down once again.

This loss came close on the heels of a heartbreaking defeat at the hands of the Ladies' Ad Society. Interviewed in the locker room after the game the coach said, "I don't know why these guys can't score. They've got the drive, but there's just something missing."

For the latest addition to her never-ending collection—four sharks and a 50-gallon aquarium for the darlings to swim in. Can anyone top that? This is just a small sample of the many insane incidents which happen here every day. If you have any personal gems, drop us a line and let us expose you to the world. P.S. All names used are fictional and any resemblance to the truth (did any of those incidents sound familiar?) was intentional. After all, if you can't laugh at yourself, you're really in trouble.

is the most natural and maturc thing to do, and hope that the men will take it upon themselves to stay out of female sanctuaries.”

In addition, Miss Watson stated that if men did not choose to live separately, the “strong possibility” exists of an armed takeover of the campus by incensed members of the parents committee and alumnae association. “Our plan has its flaws,” Dean Watson said, “but we feel that the students will agree our new plan is better than all the rational ideas we have considered.”
