The Amato Opera Company will make its second appearance on campus with a performance of Puccini's Tosca on Tuesday evening, April 23. Last year, their production of Verdi's La Traviata was extremely well received, and this year they hope to repeat the success.

The Opera Company is a very interesting group. They are op- erated on Bleeker Street in Greenwich Village in a small but spacious and attractive black house. It is a non-profit group or- ganized primarily to acquaint students with opera. The only production of Verdi's La Traviata was extremely well received, and this year they hope to repeat the success.

The quality of their productions, considering the very limited number of operas, is of course enviable. Their stage is tiny, but they succeed in conquering this with extremely clever reversals which give a different atmosphere of the great space needed for opera. Backstage, everyone is busy with a large number of backstage crew to a large extent. It is easy to see the singers on stage rolling up their sleeves to help with the curtain falls and helping with the singing as well.

Ex-Chief Justice Discusses Duties Of Honor Court

by Dotty Egan

Since the Convocation of 1957, there have been many elections, but none as significant as this one which each body entails. With reference to the various committees, this particular election has been in the types of cases with which the Court of Honor is concerned, for these questions have occurred. If they provide the opportunity to restate some of the Court's actitudes, it will perhaps lead to a reprecipitation of what we so often take for granted.

The keynote of our Student Senate is under this code each student is subject to the judgments of his peers. The judging is based on the social as well as the academic standards of the College. The chief function of Honor Court is to uphold this code, which by its very nature makes the scope of the Court's jurisdiction a broad one.

Cases which come before the Court are those involving infractions of specific Student Government rules as well as those of a more academic nature. The former would involve situations reported by students regarding lateness, smoking, improper dress, tardiness at chapel, or amendment, violation of the honor code, and the like. Within this category, too, are those cases involving an academic nature such as dishonesty in exams or plagiarism. Examples of cases falling with the latter group are more difficult to deal with, as these questions have occurred. Mary McLean is an integral part of the IBM sales force. The reason is that the installation of every IBM system requires investigation and preparation—including a period of continuous computing that continues for several weeks after the first machine has been installed. During this initial phase, Mary's tasks include overseeing the machine, advising the customer... and generally assuming a great and unusual responsibility for the machine.

"It's never a desk job; it's never a traveling job," says Mary, "I spend my day working with people in my home town, Buffalo, N. Y. . . . discussing their office procedures. I demonstrate the machine to test their accuracy. I later instruct the customer's personnel in the proper use and care of their IBM equipment. In other words, I try to do everything smoothly from the customer's point of view. The variety of the positions is what makes one's work so stimulating—and I appreciate the chance to exercise my imagination in this dynamic field of business electronics."

Learning the fundamentals
Mary's first business experience in Buffalo was somewhat limiting. She was not until the spring of 1956 that a young IBM executive put the IBM box in Mary's basement. She investigated, listened, and immediately began a three months' course for beginners in the Buffalo office. There she fulfilled the operations of the basic calculators and electronic accounting machines.

"And at the end of this three-month period, I turned to Mary possessed sufficient knowledge to analyze the panel mechanisms which control the functions of the smaller calculators."

New development established
In May of 1963, Mary attended IBM Applications School. "At Eindhoven, N. Y., I learned of the more advanced forms of electronic digital computing—particularly the IBM Cardiaype. This, by the way, is a combination of three IBM machines that produces as many as five different, original documents simultaneously—a great boon to record-keeping. I'd say offhand that between 75 to 100 women could be utilized in one of IBM's 189 branch offices. Right now, we have about 350 girls in System Service... and many more A.B. graduates can find exciting work in this department. It has grown tremendously since its beginning in 1935, and offers a remarkable career for the conscientious intelligent woman. I would advise evening will combine the efforts of students of dance, music, and members of Wig and Candle, the latter group working on the technical production. The program is in three parts: a series of short sketches on dances of the past and from foreign lands, entitled “From Other Times and Other Places;” a series of sketches on contemporary themes, entitled “From Here and Now;” and a musical work, entitled “Tradition in Harmony,” has been adapted to music by Misses Swaff, Arline Hinkson and Dybby Cohen. Carol Whitney ’56 will play the flute and Nancy Savin will sing. The dances were all choreographed by members of Dance Group.

Next week’s theme of News will carry the program with times and places of the excursions and rehearsals, and a sketch of John Gaskins, who will deliver the Selden Memorial Lecture.
