Financial Aid Cuts

by Mary Hafftenberg and Cynthia Fazzari, Assistant News

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law will directly cut student financial aid, an unprotected federal program, if the administration and Congress cannot agree on a budget that will reduce the deficit.

"I don't want to scare students into thinking that they will no longer receive aid or will have to transfer because of the cuts," said Marcia Gardiner, director of Financial Aid. At a SOAR meeting on April 11, Mrs. Gardiner addressed a group of students concerned that the cuts would effect the diversity of the college.

"We already have a reputation of being an elitist school as it is! Any financial cutbacks in aid will severely impair our chances of being more diverse, and then we will truly be just a country club," added Richard Greenwald, president of SOAR.

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings mandates that the Federal Deficit be reduced by two progressively lower levels for the next six years. After 140 billion in reductions, Congress hopes to achieve a

Wadsworth File Reopened

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to Mr. Gordon’s letter of October 28. I find it ironic that Mr. Gordon illustrates his argument on gun control by referencing the misfortunes of the Wadsworth children.

Mr. Gordon is correct that the students killed at the Wadsworth residence were not the only victims of gun violence that day. It is also true that students at this institution and many others have and will continue to be affected by the actions of others in our society. However, Mr. Gordon’s commentary on this matter is not relevant to the argument he has presented, which is about the right to bear arms.

I would suggest that Mr. Gordon read the works of influential thinkers, such as Thomas Jefferson and John Locke, who have argued for the right to bear arms as a means of self-defense. These authors have provided a rich history of the justification for the right to bear arms.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

On Monday, April 28, Conn students will be notified of their dorm assignment for next year. This year's lottery procedure is similar to last year's, but it has added the possibility of designating a quiet floor. The site of the quiet floor will be determined simply by the number of students showing interest, states Marji Lipshez, Assistant Dean for Residential Life. For example, if only eight students are sincerely interested, a floor in a small dorm such as Smith will be designated as "quiet," while a larger hall will serve as the quiet floor if a larger group of students expresses interest.

Students also have the option of participating in a special lottery for non-single room. Upperclassmen interested in obtaining a double, triple, or quad (many of which have private bathroom) may participate in a special drawing for such rooms.

Last year, approximately fifty students opted for non-single rooms, and according to Lipshez, students gave positive comments about their choices. Also, due to the record-breaking class size this year, students have expressed interest in living in Knowlton, language department faculty members are aiding in the selection of future Knowlton residents.

Juli Unearths Prehistoric Indian Village

Associate Professor of Anthropology, Harold Juli, may have unearthed the remains of a prehistoric, coastal Indian village in Connecticut dating from the late Woodland period. The late Woodland spans the period approximately 1000 B.C. to 1600 A.D. Juli bases his optimism upon a radiocarbon date of 1490 A.D. The site referred to as the Hillhouse site, is located at the mouth of the Connecticut River in Old Lyme and is part of the Griswold estate. Juli learned of the site, while working with John Pfeiffer, a graduate student from S.U.N.Y. present a scholarly paper.

While examining aerial photography of the Hillhouse site, Pfeiffer noticed distinct soil discolorations. Soil discolorations of this distinct shape are often an indication of previous human habitation. The occurrence causes the soil to change in chemical composition, and the addition of a new texture from the surrounding vegetation.

A computer printout will be posted on the main bulletin board in the lobby of Croc, listing students' dormitory assignments by Monday, April 28. On Monday, May 5 at 10:15 p.m. students will go to their newly assigned dorms and choose rooms for next year.

The flotation method is used to examine a hearth from the site. The SGA committee provided answers to many questions at the information sessions, and are very active in determining lottery policies as well as room assignments. This SGA committee is gaining responsibility and importance.

Lipshez explained that in the future two members of each class and a house officer will also be added to this committee. Neither Lipshez nor the students on the committee, however, can determine whether there will be a housing shortage next year.

They are now finalizing fifty students opted for non- single rooms, and according to Lipshez, students gave positive comments about their choices. Also, due to the record-breaking class size this year, students have expressed interest in living in Knowlton, language department faculty members are aiding in the selection of future Knowlton residents.

Six lottery information sessions were held recently. Marji Lipshez and student members of the lottery committee answered important questions for the handful of students who chose to attend these helpful sessions. Of particular importance is the quota system used in assigning students to a certain dorm. Each dorm has a specific number of rooms allocated to students on the basis of their gender and class standing. For example, a dorm which has only three rooms designated for Senior males cannot house for junior males who have chosen to move together. The exact number of this quota system can be obtained from Marji Lipshez.

To the Editor:

We the members of the Food Committee submit the following article with the purpose of conveying our discontent with the Voice's coverage of the Food Plan. Our primary intention, taking into account the many economical and physical restrictions, was to provide the students with an improved Food Plan.

The decision whether or not to adopt a new program was one that we wanted to leave up to the students, after a fair representation of both the pros and cons. Unfortunately, due to a well-timed, misrepresented Voice editorial, the issue was tainted before students had a fair chance to evaluate the new program. The Food Plan was misrepresented on the following five points:

1) We were quoted as saying, "Pay more for less," when in fact that statement did not appear in our article.

2) The article stated that the Food Plan was a "short term food improvement." We would have wished; however, that five days notice is required for the food committee to discuss and act on the new program. The new plan did not pass, and we are responsible for accepting deposits, balancing ledger sheets, and paying bills from campus departments such as the Bookstore and Campus Safety.

3) A large and precarious step was taken to change the menu without the knowledge or consent of the students. We wanted to leave up to the students what they would be eating.

4) Another misrepresentation was the statement that traditional outdoor events and cookouts would become history. Three misrepresentations raise a few questions. Why was only one side of the issue presented? Why was the article published at a time when no rebuttal was possible? When questioned, Fernando Espuelas, managing editor of the Voice and House President of Branford, said that "it was only an editorial" and that "no one would be influenced by it." In addition, when later asked why he had misrepresented the facts, Mr. Espuelas responded, "I misunderstood the points made in Document #4" (from which the information was taken). The Food Committee questions how someone who had much more access to the information and plenty of time to evaluate it could do the students such a disservice by presenting them with a biased view. Despite the fact that the new meal plan did not pass, we do feel that progress had been made this year. We understand that the new plan involved a large and precautionary step and respect the fact that students did not wish to sacrifice unlimited access to the dining hall and multiple facilities for a program that did not ensure short term food improvement. We realize that the issue may not have been presented as thoroughly as we would have wished; however, we hope to alleviate this problem in the next meal plan we present.

Even though the new plan did not pass, the Food Committee believes the year off with many optimistic hopes for the future. Thank you for your time.

The Food Committee

To the Editor:

In response to the letter from Sandy Pratt '88 in your last issue, we as Student Organization Treasurers would like to clarify a few points raised.

First, because the office is run by students, we can not be open Monday-Friday from 9:30-3:30. The hours must coincide with the treasurers' schedules. Secondly, your dorm treasurer obviously has thanked you for your letter, the "next to nothing" about the Deredia case, Mr. Gordon saw the crudity of Wendy Wadsworth's letter and felt the need to respond. We Spanish students could not have said it better ourselves. Thank you.

Publish Or Perish
by Heidi Sweeney
According to Dean Atherton, there is "a subtle but important hierarchical relationship between teaching and active scholarship." Without the active pursuit of scholarship, a college professor is no better than a high school professor with a Ph.D. Currently, the Faculty Steering and Conference Committee is working on a Faculty development plan that will better enable professors to pursue their scholarly interests without adversely affecting the course curriculum.

The current course load for Connecticut College Professors is three courses each semester. Other colleges, whose academic standing is similar to Conn, such as Amherst, have a two/two system. In addition to their courseloads, Conn professors are advisors and they participate on Committee Committees. In accomplishing all of the above and actively pursuing their academic research, Conn professors find themselves "spread too thin" according to Bridget Baird, Chairperson of the Faculty Steering and Conference Committee.

For the past three years, faculty have had some access to time off or a reduction in courses when they wanted to produce scholarly works. Five untenured faculty in the past three years have been awarded competitive leave for their scholarly projects, for a semester at full pay. But these untenured faculty must have four to five years standing at the school. Only one or two professors are awarded each year.

Sabbaticals for tenured faculty are part of the College's regular policy. A tenured professor may be given a leave at half pay or a semester's leave at full pay. Tenured professors may compete for a special sabbatical where they receive extra pay for a full year. Two of these sabbaticals are given every year.

If a faculty member is nearing completion on their work, they may apply for a "capstone grant." This grant would reduce the professor's course load and enable him to accelerate completion of his work. In the past two years, four faculty members have earned this award.

If a faculty member has been active with student's individual studies or honor studies in addition to their normal load of courses, they may apply for a lighter course load. In the past two years, nine faculty have been granted a course remission for teaching one four individual studies and two honors studies.

The College does provide some monetary aid for professor's scholarly pursuits. Funding is available for faculty members who are travelling to present papers or give and/or attend lectures.

The most important part of a teacher's scholarship that he or she can impact to their class is the thinking process, according to Baird. To "think clearly, to analyse facts and make connections," is that the process which is involved in scholarship and that "is what we try to teach the students," explained Baird.

The FSCC's plans for Faculty Development are in its infant stage. The FSCC has asked all the College departments to submit proposals, and are currently drawing up a list of top priorities. Longer paid leave-time and a lighter teaching load are emerging as top priorities. There is a universal need for more computer, audiovisual equipment, and special computer software programs that teachers might be involved in more interdisciplinary programs. A need for more research support such as equipment, staffing and student work study has been indicated. A possible program of visiting professors is being discussed about at this time.

The crucial point which FSCC is dealing with is how to make the professors' work easier without increasing the size of classes or decreasing the amount of courses offered. Johnson said that "the ideal answer is a slightly larger faculty, but coming that ideal situation is some time off. It involves building the College endowment."
School To Escuela

by Barbara Keese

The new structure on the Green by the northwest side of Shain Library was constructed April 13th, by a group of about 20 students. The appearance of a 12 x 24 foot structure prompted quite a few questions from students passing by the green. As part of the SCHOOL TO ESCUELA campaign the representative structure has certainly succeeded in getting the attention of the campus.

Beyond this, the student group, Solidaridad, has encouraged professors to hold classes in the escuela which will also serve as the shelter for a variety of evening events. On a wider scale, the structure represents the depressed educational facilities common to most neighborhoods in Central America. SCHOOL TO ESCUELA hopes to involve the whole campus in recognizing the advantageous conditions provided at Connecticut College for education.

In encouraging the campus to go farther than that recognition, SCHOOL TO ESCUELA provides a way to extend our commitment to education by raising money to build a new elementary school in Barrio Nuevo, Nicaragua. Lumber for the project was provided in part by Niantic Lumber, which was donated by a local company, and collected from various construction sites on Saturday.

A group of Southeastern Connecticut residents, including at least one Connecticut College student, will build the actual new school in July to replace the dilapidated, overcrowded building now in use. Photographs of the existing school are on display at the Shain Library.

Financial Aid

The college is not concerned about the 1986-87 academic year, but is looking more in the future. "The college wants to keep the federal aid that we have now," says Mrs. Gardner, "as well as maintain and support the state programs which have power to off-set the federal cuts."

An example of a state program is the Connecticut Independent College Student Grant Program which tries to maintain diversity in higher education by allowing students to have access to as well as a choice of a college. Connecticut College received $108,000 from this program, which directly aided 183 of our students.

Professor William Cibes, a leading legislator in Connecticut's General Assembly, was against increasing the student grant program last year. "I don't see why we should get an increase of 10% while the public educational schools only got an increase of 4%-10% in funds. But this year is a different issue. We were competitors for essential programs of state universities but in the end I supported us." As for the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Bill Professor Cibes added, "It's a lousy bill because it abdicates legislative authority. It does, however, make cuts in defense."

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings reduction come at a time when President Reagan's Budget has been viewed as "dead upon arrival" in Congress. "Reagan is not convinced that education is a federal responsibility," Mrs. Gardner said. "One interesting feature of the budget, according to Mrs. Gardner, was the repayment provision which allows students to pay back loans in terms of their income. Financial aid, on the other hand, is a politically easy way to support higher education and students.

Congress will soon be reviewing student aid programs, such as Pell Grants. This is a large gift aid program with the goal of providing a base of financial aid for low income families in order that their children will have access to post secondary school education.

"We won't be able to have a diverse student body if we are subject to major cuts," Mrs. Gardner. "Aid continues equal opportunity for students and forwards the American Dream."
Playing To An Empty House

For noncommercial theaters, 1985 was a year when audiences, despite record numbers, faced season-long deficits as did commercial theaters according to a survey conducted by the Theater Communications Group.

The study, distributed annually to assess the financial status of noncommercial theater companies nationwide found that although those institutions sampled earned more money in 1984, they also fell more deeply in debt.

Theater Facts 85, the survey, polled almost 200 noncommercial theaters. A comparison of the results from the past five years shows that assets of 37 of the sampled establishments have fallen from a $14,000 surplus to a $1.7 million deficit.

The American Repertory Theater in Cambridge Mass.; the Circle in the Square and the Circle Repertory, both in New York; the Goodman Theater in Chicago; the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis; the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles, and the Long Wharf Theater and Yale Repertory Theater both in New Haven were among those included in the study.

Robert Holley, the author of the report has interpreted the results as indications that these theaters are approaching the limits of how much they can possibly earn. Even though they are filling their spaces to an average of 70 percent capacity (only a few of them have more than 500 seats in their primary auditories), running their seasons for and average of 37 weeks, presenting an average of 392 performances and selling tickets for as much as $16 a seat, the theaters surveyed are profitless.

There are several implications that arise in this light. The first is the controversy of raising ticket prices and risking smaller turnout. “A lot of the larger and better theaters are against the wall,” Mr. Holley said. “There are only so many seats and you can only sell them for so much money. There really is no limit on these theater’s earnings.”

The second problem involves the type of productions a theater in such financial straits can produce. Tiny budgets restrict play selection to modern works with only “very small casts and simple costumes.” This eliminates much change of large scale classical productions such as Shakespeare or musical productions such as Moliere.

Although noncommercial theaters have seen a growth in new playwritings and plays, including virtually every Pulitzer Prize winning drama in the past 15 years their financial situation precludes their opportunity to grant their company and guest performers the chance for classical experience. Audiences are short changed as well.

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction bill on Federal Arts Programs will be another influence however its extent is yet to be seen. Before the imposition of this bill, aid from Federal sources had increased 9 percent while local government aid fell 3 percent.

The survey showed also that aid from private sources rose as did corporate funding. The report found that 20 of 81 theaters now had endowment funds which combined assets of $27.5 million.

“The next five years will tell the story,” Mr. Holley said. “By the early 1990’s, we ought to know how much of the noncommercial theater is here to stay.”

The study was supported in part by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Indomitable Women's Lax
by Dave Gross

The women's lacrosse team is off to another terrific start. After crushing Mt. Holyoke last Tuesday, by the score of 14-7, the lady camels boosted their record to 5-1. The ladies' only setback was in their opener against perennial powerhouse Trinity. Every member of the team has been vital in this year's success.

The root to a strong team is its defense. Conn's is outstanding. Starting in the goal is senior co-captain Ashley Ridgeway. In front of her is a very strong defensive corps led by sophomores Jen Schelter, Karen Escalona, Regina Duffly, junior Sue Landau, and senior Caroline Twomey.

The Camels are superb in their transition game. The credit for this goes to senior co-captain Isabelle Day, fellow senior Lisa Miller, junior Julie May, and sophomore Holly Reiman.

Few teams can match the Camels depth. With the likes of juniors Rena Whitehouse and Maggie Hug, and sophomores Robin Legge, Elizabeth McCullough, and Claudia Brewster coming off the bench, Conn never worries about a letdown.

The squad played Wesleyan and Holy Cross, last Thursday and Saturday respectively (past Voice deadline) and this week they travel up to Maine to face NESCAC foes Bates and Colby.

Men’s Track

by Marc LaPlace

Combining strong individual efforts with consistent team performance, the Connecticut College Men’s Track Team has fared well in its first four meets of the 1986 season.

At their first contest on March 29 against Stonehill, the men captured first place in all but one event, shattering the Shamrock squad by the score of 84-16.

The Camel runners came back on April 5 with strong races at the non-scoring Fitchburg Relays. Junior Steve Compton and senior Matt Brown set school records in the 400 meters (53.6), as well as the 400-meter hurdles (60.8) and the 110-meter hurdles. (15.2) Complete’s 110-meter hurdles time qualified him for the New England-Division III Championships.

Also at the Fitchburg meet, both the 400-meter relay team of Senior Dimitri Zepos, Freshman Volker Schmitz, Compton, and Sophomore Ted Liang and the 1600-meter relay of Compton, Sophomore John Barnett, Sophomore Paul Hyde and Schmitz shattered Conn record.

On April 9 at a five-team meet at the Coast Guard Academy, Conn’s 54 points were enough to beat Bryant, Rhode Island College and Nichols. Coast Guard won the meet with 146-59 points. Junior Frank Tewitt captured first place in the high jump (5’10”), and second place in the triple jump (40’5”). Zepos won the 110-meter hurdles in a time of 15.8 seconds. Both the 200-meter relay and the 1600-meter relay were won by Conn.

Head Coach Mark Connolly has been quite pleased with the individual races of his runners, as well as the success of the relay teams.

“We have a good number of people who have been running well and our relay team are scoring points in just about every race.”

In the squad’s most recent meet on April 12, Conn finished third as a team behind Williams and Trinity. Points scorers for Conn included Zepos with first place in the long jump and second place in the 110-meter hurdles. Tewitt finished second in the triple jump and third in the high jump. Sophomore Geoff Perkins took fourth place in the 5000 meters and the 400-meter relay team of Zepos, Sophomore John Ong, Schmitz, and Liang placed second.

“I’m very happy with the way the season’s going,” Coach Connolly commented.

“People are running well and improving. As long as that’s happening, you have to be happy.”

Womens’s Varsity Lacrosse

by Doug Hobbs

A good way to maintain control of the flow of the game is to have an explosive transition game. Conn faced-off against the Amherst Lord-Jeffs in the first quarter. Carlos DelCristo and tri-captain Dave McCormick, and attackman Larry Goldstein spearheaded this display of offensive prowess, netting three of Conn’s four first-period goals. In the second quarter Wesleyan scrambled and clawed back to a 5-5 half-time lead.

One minute and fifty-seven seconds into the third quarter, Tom Reiling bruised his left shoulder and left the game with Conn trailing 7-4. Sophomore Larry Goldstein, an extremely solid and dependable back-up, came into the game to man Conn record in 4:25.3.

In the contest against Trinity in mid-ground balls 61-38. Shields added, "It's just a strong team.”

In the Amherst contest, Carlos DelCristo and Bob Behrens scored two goals each to lead Conn’s offense. Coach Shields was justifiably disappointed in the extra-man-offense’s production. The extra-man squad was ineffective only two of its ten opportunities.

Conn faced-off against the Wesleyan Cardinals on April 8 in Middletown. In a close, long battle, Conn fell short once again, losing 12-10. The frustration of this tough loss was clearly evident in Coach Post’s game comment, "(It was) a game we should have won.”

Conn powered to a 4-2 edge in the first quarter. Carlos DelCristo showcased this display of offensive prowess, netting three of Conn’s four first-period goals. In the second quarter Wesleyan scored and clawed back to a 5-5 half-time lead.

One minute and fifty-seven seconds into the third quarter, Tom Reiling bruised his left shoulder and left the game with Conn trailing 7-4. Sophomore Larry Goldstein, an extremely solid and dependable back-up, came into the game to man Conn's 9-7 victory over the Lord-Jeffs. Larry Goldstein assisted on McCormick’s goal. At the end of the third quarter Wesleyan held a 9-7 advantage. Wesleyan scored the first two goals of the fourth quarter before Conn added two goals of its own, evening the score at 9-9, in an exciting 13-12 victory. Each team tallied one more goal to make the final score 12-10.

Last Thursday (April 10) Conn continued its winning ways on their first win of the young ‘86 season. Conn beat the pumped-up Wesleyan 11-7 on a temperature of 101 degrees.
