Secretary-General for NATO gives U.S. Press Conference

Dr. Dirk Stikker, Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), recently gave a press conference at the University of Connecticut, where he discussed various topics related to the organization and its role in global security.

Stikker emphasized the importance of peace and the need for a collective guarantee of peace. He expressed concern about the possibility of war in the near future and emphasized the role of NATO in maintaining peace.

Stikker also addressed the issue of the Western Alliance's future and the political uncertainties surrounding its existence. He stated that NATO must continue to adapt to the changing geopolitical landscape and remain relevant to its member states.

The Secretary-General also spoke about the role of universities and the importance of education in fostering a better understanding of global issues. He highlighted the work of the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship, which provides opportunities for American college seniors to study at a British college.

Stikker concluded his remarks by thanking the audience for their attention and expressing his hope for continued cooperation and dialogue.

Topic: U.S. and European Economies

Lukacs Opens IRC Weekend; Emphasizes 'Idea of Europe'

The International Relations Club (IRC) at Connecticut opens its spring session with the topic U.S. and European Economies. Professor Lukacs opens the weekend with the "idea of European Federation". He emphasizes that the talk should be submitted on the earliest date permitted by any given school (this is usually, but not always, July 1).

Contuing his chronological survey, Professor Lukacs cites the development of the 16th century which preceded the rise of the United States and other republics, as well as the rise of nationalism and the development of international relations.

Professor Lukacs discusses the second half of the 19th century, first the United States, then France, and finally the United Kingdom. He emphasizes the idea of European Federation and the need for a common market. The talk on its gold standard. The lost much of the impact of the Great Depression.

In the political sphere, the theme of the day was the "turning of the page" of the United States, and the "togetherness" of the people, while the United States was in the throes of the economic depression of its people.

Professor Lukacs ended his forceful and eloquent speech by stressing the need for a more unified Europe. The talk emphasized the essence of unity, which has been hinted at in the economic situation of the United States and France, and expressed a hope for the future of European cooperation.

In his final comment, Professor Lukacs ended his talk with "America and Europe: The Atlantic Alliance". He stressed the importance of the Atlantic Alliance and the need for a common market.

After the talk, the audience had a chance to ask questions. The audience was impressed with Professor Lukacs' knowledge and the depth of his analysis. Many of the questions were related to the current political situation in Europe, and the prospects for a European Federation.

Mr. D. Mickiewicz
Reviews Inspector in Dostoevski Novel

Wednesday night, March 11, Mr. Deni- nilowicki's novel was examined.

The essential argument of the Inspector is that the Church is a totalitarian movement in Russia and Dostoevski's battle was to move on to discuss the themes of planned legislation as they are presented in the Inspector's novel.

The conclusion asserts the Church improves and amends Christ's teachings by supplying the ultimate spiritual and moral authority on earth that man requires. It supplies a plan for society and a method of salvation. This plan enables Cthor's individualism to achieve its full potential; thus man enjoys a full and complete psychology of external authority.

Mr. Mickiewicz suggests that Dostoevski's planned society suspends the critical function of freedom (i.e., decision) which existence requires. It supplies a plan for society and a method of salvation. This plan enables Cthor's individualism to achieve its full potential; thus man enjoys a full and complete psychology of external authority.

Significance that makes him more than one notch in a "system of plane keys."

The ultimate questions that

Dostoevski asks are to what extent the Inspector's argument might be condemned or justifi-ced. Christ didn't love his芯anity if he asked too much of man. Perhaps it was wrong of Christ to refuse, as he did when he denied the devil's propositions, to operate through miracle and authority. It is necessary for the Church to supply the psychological context that man requires, not only in terms of freedom, the essence of real existence.

While Dostoevski undermines the legalistic basis of the Inspector's concept of the Church, he never deprecates Christ either. "The Inspector" is a critical"account of Dostoevski's viewpoint in which Dostoevski leaves ques-tures open. Rather, the story presents the possibilities of Christ and the Inspector and bids the reader to examine the problem which Dostoevski clearly recognized: the dichotomy of individual freedom and moral responsibility versus universal authority and personal happiness.

a reality and it will not end in the country. It is necessary for the Church to supply the psychological context that man requires, not only in terms of freedom, the essence of real

M. Harrington Discusses Socialism at Conference

Socialism is to exist it must be democratic, if democracy is to continue it must become socialistic. These are the opening words of Michael Harrington's address on "The Challenge of New Combines in America," the opening speech of a half-hour address by the conference speaker on Socialism in America. As a trade union official Mr. Harrington cited the invisible hand toward communism in the United States today and suggested that the alliance of today may possibly become political and representative in our present two-party system.

Mr. Harrington suggested that the best example of capitalism destroying itself in the form of the cooperative and the emerging collectivism within capitalism.

Alvin Ailey Group To Feature Blues, Jazz in Program

Tonight at 8:30 the Alvin Ailey Dance Theater is performing at Pacific Symphony, which has choreographed pieces which put the spirit of jazz, blues and traditions Negro spirituals into music, utilizing tap, jazz and modern dance to form the core of the program.

"This tour is composed of the most significant of our current national scores and the American contemporary dance music. Music of Alvin Ailey and Eileen Cooper will be featured.

From the fields, lowdowns, and barrooms of the southern Negro sprang the blues--song forms that convey feeling of an era which we think of as the past. However, the blues spirit is living today and can never be expressed more beautifully than in Alvey's choreography, One does not have to be a dancer or a dance critic to appreciate Alvey's degree of effective understanding.

In the program one can see the motivations and emotions of Negro soul--song forms being re-energized in the dance medium. This music, like the blues, the blues takes many forms--true spirit songs, blues songs, spirituals, folk songs, sermons, and gospel songs. The rhythm and arrangement of "Baked" and "Slimer Man" take on new levels of meaning with Alvey's choreography.

Mr. Ailey's choral Foxtail of Advance, which is performing in Leinster, Ireland, will be featured.

The order of service will be upon the ancient Apostolic Tradition of St. Hippolytus, Hippolytus was a proponent of the Christian community in Rome at the beginning of the third century. He died a martyr's death in the year 235. Sometimes around 200, Hippolytus wrote a manual of church order called the Apostolic Tradition of the Church. In this work he ordinated the order of the Eucharistic service as it was observed in his day.

The service of Holy Communion in this church has been chosen as the basis of an interdenominational service for several reasons. First, because no service of this kind ever going back to the early Christian Church. Second, because it is a service acceptable to Protestants of all traditional traditions, and one Protestant tradition of English. It is derived from the Roman Catholic Church, but rather it isolates them all. The service has been adapted and prepared for use in the Connecticut College Chapel by Mr. Purvey.
