Bed and Bored

'Tis spring again and newspapers' fancies turn to themes of romance, the usual departure from the realistic attitude of the younger generation. College administrations strive in coldblood to curb and chuck out any outbreaks of affection, in suppression and demonstration. (Although it often appears that as long as these blosoms forth beyond the town limits, the actions are not so loudly condemned.)

But for all the concern with the mad revels which serve to foil the otherwise banal machinations of our photographs, it seems that many of the developed habits of the college generation reflect the rather mediocre, middle-aged, and pale things we have so loudly condemned.

As the opening of registration approaches, security seekers, of premarital, homocide, was there the comment in 'Time' magazine by a student of Hunter College which ran something to the effect that she and her 'date' behaved "just like old married people," after dinner off to bed, with luck. It is difficult to decide whether this comment is the result of the tragic failure of the 'older generation' to imbue some inkling (or pardon the expression) Love, or a laughable naive and stupid analogy. In either case it is crude, and perhaps indicative of the prevailing attitude.

The situation is so miserably selfish; the babbings that go, based on the "existential loneliness" of the individuals involved is a sick, shallow, and hypochritical. (The following phrases in quotations from 'Newsweek,' April 6, 1964, "Life's Lesson of us against the world.", "The ideal thing (kissing mind you, not person, man or woman) is to have someone you can depend on."

...need the security of 'existence,' which we can depend on."

The early emphasis upon group involvements is not to be ignored. Two people rush together for security, they may be together as

College has urged from the start a reevaluation and criticism of dating habits. "So terribly middle-class, so terribly middle-aged."

"If today's students act middle-aged at all, it will be middle-aged in the 20th century. Women who are quick to admit our treasure-tossed earth casts down her all-condoning eyes upon the new moralities. This is nuclear subs" (she weeps) "It's nuclear subs," (she cries of alarm over the uninhibited show of moral degradation. They are part of a whole generation which has evolved in a mass society."

Social isolation means the "unfreedom and self-shame" of all the "selfish and sex-suffocated" in the "most perfunctory, affluent and sex-suffocated society in history." We find the sex-of-suflusion less important than the dual factors. We do not understand the surprise of parents who have given their charges complete freedom and included them in any material whim. Parents of one of our contingent have been dating from the 10 of 11 have taken off to college at 14 and have pretty much demonstrated their standards.

College has urged from the start a reevaluation and criticism of dating habits. They have offered the argument that once

Youth must see its moral decisions as not so removed from those decisions. You must decide how to act and what to do. The decision that you have made is not so removed as the generation before you. You are beginning to wonder whether this freedom has brought you freedom.

The book has not been confined to sex morals. It has been an attempt to fill the total gap which lack of training and wide knowledge of the college student's environment. It has been an effort to fill the gaps.

Youth must see its moral decisions as not so removed from those decisions. You must decide how to act and what to do. The decision that you have made is not so removed as the generation before you. You are beginning to wonder whether this freedom has brought you freedom.

Joyce Humphrey, Violincellist, Gives Musical Recitation

In spite of the drizzling rain which had been coming down, Mr. Hugh Holmes characterized Mrs. Humphrey's performance on her violincello as the achievement of four years of concentrated study in her major field of music.

Her short program included the Chestnut Tree, a cello sonata by C. Schreyer. Miss Page's display of technical ability and sensitivity in her playing. Her left hand covered the full range of strings on her violin, skillfully performing trills and other musical ornamentation.

The Chestnut Tree, the last selection of the program, was a difficult work that required Miss Page to demonstrate her skill and understanding of the piece. The performance was well received by the audience, who were impressed by her ability to execute the technical demands of the piece.

The Chestnut Tree was followed by Miss Page's assistance in the performance of the Violincello Concerto in D minor by Beethoven. The last movement of this concerto, Miss Page played with lightness and with such composer-like conducting that the audience was impressed with the grace and beauty of the piece.

Four Students Visit Howard Univ. in Week Exchange

Howard University, generally rated as best of the Negro schools, was host for eight days to four Connecticut girls in a spring exchange. Howard compiles ten colleges and has a student body of over eight thousand students. Foreign students comprise about ten percent of the enrollment, and there are significant numbers of white students, especially in the graduate and professional schools. This diversity is stimulating.

Howard has a wide range of social and service fraternities. At a spirited rally, the girls who participated in the exchange watched some fraternities sing intricate chants as each tried to gain the greatest number of spectators. The city of Washington, besides offering a variety of cultural events, and the University also sponsors a multitude of activities.

Adson Industries Undertakes Area Urban Renewal Project

The Citizens’ Action Committee (CACP) of New London held a meeting in the dining room of the Mohican Hotel on evening, to discuss an urban renewal project by the Federal Government in a city undertaking urban renewal. This project, the CACP is interested in, was sponsored by the Federal Government. According to the CACP, the project is designed to improve the conditions in the city of New London, located on the banks of the Connecticut River.

The philosophy behind urban renewal is to bring about great improvements to the city. Urban renewal is a process of improving and developing a city to make it more attractive to the residents. This is done by building new houses and improving old ones, by making the streets look better, and by providing new schools and other public facilities. The goal is to make the city more pleasant and more livable.

Adson Industries, a company based in New London, has undertaken an urban renewal project in the city. The company has committed itself to the project and has invested a significant amount of money to make it a success. The project includes the construction of new houses and the renovation of existing ones, the construction of new schools and other public facilities, and the improvement of the streets and other public spaces. The project is expected to bring about great improvements to the city and to make it more attractive to the residents.

Student Describes Meeting With Dodd on Civil Rights Bill

In Washington, over spring vacation, I had the opportunity to speak with Senator Thomas Dodd of Connecticut, who is Democrat from the state of Connecticut. Senator Dodd is known for his support of civil rights legislation, and he was one of the leading sponsors of the bill.

Senator Dodd told me that he had been impressed with the efforts of the civil rights movement, and he was committed to the passage of a bill that would guarantee the rights of all Americans.

He said that the bill would provide strong protections against discrimination, and that it would make it easier for people to challenge unfair practices in the workplace and elsewhere.

Senator Dodd also discussed the importance of unity and cooperation in the fight for civil rights, and he encouraged me to continue to work towards these goals.

Sociology Students Participate

In Many Ambitious Projects

Controversy rules high among social workers and students. Undergraduate social work students should attempt to enter a professional field. It is argued by some that the untrained girl might well get into situations where she would need a trained mind so inadequate that her desire to continue to social work would be permanently quenched. The general consensus is that a social worker who is not personally prepared and who cannot be given by the untrained worker and that valuable personal insight and skills can be acquired.

Carolyn Robins, Sandra No- vicki, and Carol Scheske are working with the guidance department at the New London High School. Each has selected about twelve students with academic and emotional problems, and seems to speak to them in a renewed interest.

Two courses are currently held at the Waterford Country School. The evening they take charge of the dormitory, they finish their work for the day.

The most recent experiment of the Peace Corps is in the Junior Year Program. Students are selected for a training period in the summer. The program is an attempt to meet the needs of the minority student in college and the Latin American student. It is not a part of the Peace Corps; it is a separate program.

In recent weeks, it has been the season of Cona Domini to discover that many of the activities on which we have focused in the past are actually being made to benefit the New London community by all students.
