CLASS HISTORY

An ivory tower loses some of its isolation under the combined forces of new presidents, fewer courses, more students, fewer restrictions and national crises. The Class of 1964 has profitted from the loss. Freshman year was the year of wooden dorms. We ate meals prepared in what is now the art studio and served in the present English lecture room in Thames. We sat up all night in November and watched a President elected; we listened to his inaugural address and found that he was taking to us. The snow was deep in the still-existing freshman quad. We put on A Letter to Lucerne, we sang competitively, we idolized a goat and watched the North end of campus be stripped of trees, gouged, and trampled. Our sophomore year was one of mixed accomplishment. Our contribution to the rising complex, a Ghinko tree, had to be removed because of its odor. More successful was The Women, our winning compet play. Following the feminine emphasis, in 1963 we went on The Trojan Women, another triumph, which left its audience with the vivid image of an inflamed stage. The dramatic climax of the year, Red, White, and Who?, left equally vivid images: lines of chorus girls dancing intricate manuevers, Washington cocktail society, the New Haven rhythmically chugging six Connecticut occupants to the capital, President Kennedy and his family, and the throbbing "We are the up and coming *gen*eration!"

We opened the final year of our college career by becoming the first class to be served sherry at the senior banquet, and closed the year as the first class in years to be graduated outside. Each year the class historian notes that the past four years have been years of "transition". Each year the class historian is right; they have been. The particular appropriateness of the word is a comment on the nature of a student as well as a comment on the nature of our age. The time has come for the Class of 1964 to examine the particular characteristics of the "transition" which it has undergone. The transition has not been a smooth one; it has been sometimes dramatic, sometimes violent. The changing tempo of the college has been proved upon our pulses. We have witnessed an exploding college community; we have broken in six new dormitories and several renovated ones. We have undergone the transition to a four-course system and have begun agitating for three. We have studied during the last Connecticut years of President Park and the first years of President Shain. We have not been passive; within the college community we abolished the chapel requirements and altered college regulations. We discovered that we are not merely students of a private institution but students of a nation. Accordingly we instigated and participated in the growth of political and religious groups on campus, and actively joined the national student movement for civil rights. We discovered that we are not only students but citizens, and we mourned the assassination of President Kennedy. The institution from which we are being graduated is not the same as the one we entered four years ago. Nor are we the same persons as those who entered four years ago. Our "transition", because it is the most elusive, is the one which we must infer from a class history.

DEDICATION

Professor Konrad F. Bieber

The class of 1964 dedicates this book to Konrad F. Bieber because his actions give body to the meaning of dedication itself. Dedication takes many forms; there is dedication to a principle, to a cause, to an interest or to a responsibility. Mr. Bieber, throughout his life, has displayed all these forms. He is a man of strong conviction, but his own presence is gentle and modest. Mr. Bieber is originally from Germany, the son of a professor. Both of these factors have contributed to the shape his life has taken. As a young man, he left Germany for France, where he studied and first began teaching. At the time of the Second World War, Mr. Bieber was actively involved with the Résistance movement in France. Many of us recall hearing his account of his personal experiences during this period. Mr. Bieber participated not only in the actual operation of the Résistance, but also in the corresponding intellectual movement. In 1954, hepublished L'Allemagne Vue par les Écrivains de la Résistance Francaise, prefaced by his personal friend, Albert Camus.

Mr. Bieber was associated, also, with Vercors, whose statement in Le Silence de la Mer is perhaps the best expression of the sentiment against which the Résistance was directed: it is the voice of the German military which speaks: ". . . nous avons l'occasion de détruire la France, elle le sera. Pas seulement sa puissance: son âme aussi." It was the soul of France and the soul of every free man to which the Résistance was dedicated.

Since he has been in this country, Mr. Bieber has not only devoted himself to his teaching profession, but he has also maintained an active interest in objectives which attempt to realize the freedom of men and the freedom from fear of war. This year at Connecticut, Mr. Bieber's enthusiasm for the Civil Rights Conference and the support he lent to the Air Raid Drill Protest, as well as his interest in the numerous lectures given on various world problems, has reflected his continual concern. In the classroom, Mr. Bieber teaches with warmth and sensitivity. Students of The Contemporary Novel in France have become alive to the importance of this literature for he is speaking of men he has known.

The students who have never studied under Mr. Bieber are also aware of his presence. His energy and his charming manner are easily evident wherever he is, or in whatever he does. As an integral and motivating part of the college, Mr. Bieber is concerned with its intellectual, cultural, political and social aspects which involve this campus with the world at large. His experience demonstrates a fascinating life and his accomplishment in so many areas is indicative of a dedicated one.

IN MEMORIAM

There is a special mood of poignancy attached to the memorializing of John Fitzgerald Kennedy by any member of our college generation. The loss we feel is a penetrating one, for we were personally involved, with this man, and we were truly represented by him. We think not only of the youthful spirit which pervaded his life, but also of his background, his interests, and his ideals which were shared in some way by all of us. In addition to such an appreciation of the man, we can say that we became politically of age with President Kennedy. We can recall the new, vital interest and excitement generated in the realm of politics from the time of his election to the Presidency. This excitement intensified itself throughout Mr. Kennedy's term of office, and manifested itself concretely in such areas as the Civil Rights Conference on this campus and the Summer Internship Program in Washington. Numbers of college students in the capitol found a new governmental milieu which blended remarkably with the familiar life of intellectual challenge, which too often ebbs after the years of formal education and the departure from a college campus. The event of his death is the first national tragedy our generation has known. The particular sense of shock and dismay is more than enough to insure and strengthen our dedication to the memory of John Fitzgerald Kennedy and all that his life continues to represent for us and for the world.

MR. AUGUSTO CENTENO

Professor of Spanish

Professor Augusto Centeno, named Professor Emeritus after he retired as Head of the Spanish Department during the Summer of 1963, personifies both the ability and dynamic knowledge of the "teacher." Aside from exemplifying the true national character of his native Spain, and possessing an extensive and intensive knowledge of its literature, Mr. Centeno brought to each class a precious touch of his own life and very rich personal experience. In his college years, he was part of a surrealist group of which Frederico Garcia Lorca, the Spanish dramatist, was a member. These early associations and friendships contributed to the personal approach he took in his teaching. The injection of his own vibrant personality often bridged the gap between his students and the subject matter, and made the language of literature alive. Mr. Centeno is more than deserving of the silent tribute in the hearts of his students, who will long remember him with deep appreciation and admiration.

"El silencio es mas elocuente que la palabra."

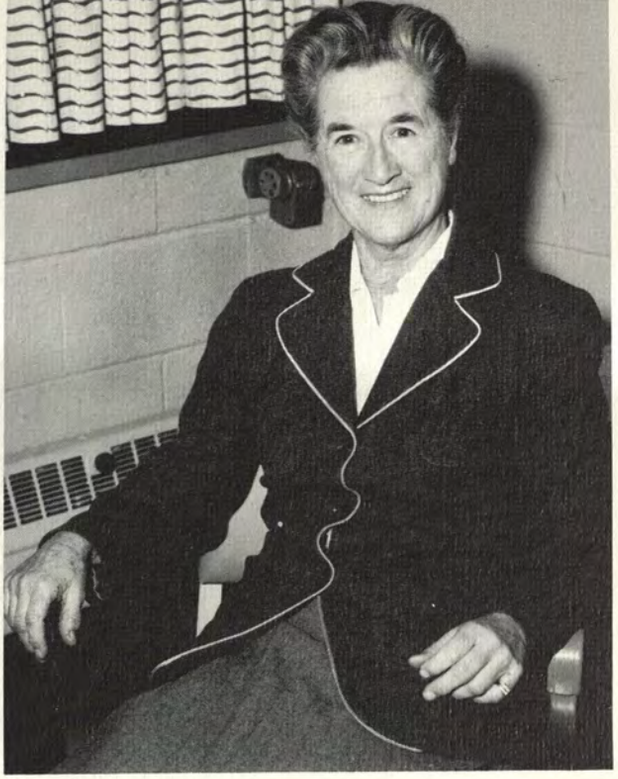
MRS. MARGARET H. ELY

Associate Professor of Economics

Mrs. Margaret H. Ely's life, on this campus and away from it, has been expressive of a personal philosophy which will continue to pervade her experience after she leaves her position as Associate Professor of Economics at Connecticut. She believes strongly in a commitment to education as a challenge and as a creative process, and she considers the lack of such a commitment the main problem in education today. In accord with this belief, Mrs. Ely has taught the Senior Seminar in Economic Research since she has been here. This course emphasizes creative research and enables students to talk with experts in their particular area. Labor and investment have always been Mrs. Ely's own favorite areas of interest and instruction. She was originally trained as a banker in the investment division of the Irving Trust Company. In addition to her love of teaching, she has actively extended her own education. Last summer she attended a Contemporary Economics Seminar and this year at Connecticut she has studied mathematical statistics. In the language of economics, Mrs. Ely feels there is a great deal of manpower, the country's most valuable resource, which is being wasted in the form of the unmotivated student. She believes this situation can be improved and, with this in mind, she intends to continue working in the educational system. We can expect further significant accomplishments by Mrs. Ely, a woman dedicated to her field and her profession.

MISS MARGUERITE HANSON
Professor of Art

Teaching the fine arts in a liberal arts college is more of a challenge than it appears to be. Professor Hanson, during her many years at Connecticut College, has met this challenge and presented her students with comprehensive and demanding courses. Her interest in color and design has been made apparent in the course, required of art majors, that emphasizes the analysis and uses of color. Professor Hanson's students will remember her as a teacher and an artist, who in her dedication to her profession imparted to her students a similar sense of seriousness and commitment. Those of us who haven't studied with her shall recall her numerous exhibits. Miss Hanson's paintaings, non-objective and usually in water colors, show a sense of creativity and thought that is matched by the content and presentation of her instruction.



MISS RUTH HILL WOOD
Assistant Professor of Physical Education

At one point in Connecticut College's history, physical education was a major in which students pursued course instruction in the psychological and social importance of activity as well as the physical. Miss Wood, Assistant Professor of Physical Education, presented courses on recreational leadership. In her class instruction, she also made her students aware and appreciative of the importance of planned activity. During the Second World War, Miss Wood published a syllabus on the principles of recreation leadership to serve as a guide for communities concerned with providing recreation for servicemen.

Along with her enthusiasm and love for the outdoors and sports, Miss Wood has cultivated an interest in painting and sketching which substantiates her belief that the manual arts are an important aspect of recreational activity. Her one-man show at Lyman Allyn Museum demonstrated that her art, with its emphasis on the outdoors and people, is another way of expressing those interests to which she has dedicated her career as an instructor.

TO THE CLASS OF 1964:

College yearbooks traditionally celebrate a single year in the life of a college (like ours) and a graduating class (like you). Yet, for all the specific details of that year the image of college life projected in yearbooks is meant to be timeless and, in a sense, flawless. This Koiné, like earlier ones, has been edited by hardworking Seniors under the aspect of eternity.

I send you Presidential greetings in the same spirit. I hope this book will always help you cherish your last college year as an extremely fine moment, held motionless in time by these pictures and names and sentiments.

But I hope I can, without striking a jarring note, also remind you that this book was manufactured in the finite year 1963-1964. At the moment I write this greeting, the times seem alternately tragic and full of hope. Our young President has been assassinated; the American Negro's battle for civil equality has just begun; the head of the largest Western church has for the first time in history traveled to Asia where his church began centuries ago.

Your undergraduate education has ended, as it began, under the aspect not only of eternity but of contemporary events and mid-twentieth century lives. Your continuing education will follow after the publication of this Koiné. May the turning of its pages remind you often of your college in 1963-1964 and your life at this moment in time.

Academic knowledge is meant for use. Understanding gained in college is gained for human purposes after college. May your college years continue to seem near to you by their relevance, by the fruit of action, understanding and joy that they continue to bear.

ALUMNAE ASSOCIATION

There is little occasion to become familiar with the Alumnae Association until the spring of the senior year when this important group holds a dinner for prospective graduates in order to introduce itself. However, the Almunae Association office in Crozier Williams, is constantly busy. It is through this office that all the college mailing is distributed to former students and friends of the college. Included in such mailing is the monthly Connecticut College newsletter and the Alumnae Association's own quarterly magazine, Connecticut College Alumnae News. The Alumnae Association is also responsible for the annual Alumnae Day and Alumnae Weekend, all Class Reunions, and Alumnae College. There are approximately 38 alumnae clubs throughout the country and 45 class organizations. As the central location for all alumnae activity, the Alumnae Association on this campus is one of the important elements in the college experience of all Connecticut students.

Student Government an editorial

This year's Student Government elections were particulary significant and unusually exciting. The time seemed ripe for discussion, criticism, and evaluation of the institutions and offices with which Connecticut has operated until this time. Suggestions for reform or reorganization have long been needed. No candidate proposed the abolishment of the organization itself, and yet this year there has been serious discussion on the value of Student Government and whether, in fact, it should be continued. Honor Court has faced the most severe criticism and received the most stalwart defense. The validity of student decisions in cases involving suspension and expulsion has been challenged. A new definition of "honor" has been called for which would exclude questions of ten minute lateness and forgetting to sign out.

Criticism and rebuttal serves an important function in Student Government. It necessitates responsiveness and disposition for change. The Student Government has proved its worth as well as its limitations. More liberal hours, fewer sign-out rules, more overnights, extension of the men-in-the-rooms privilege, fewer Amalgos, and a student colloquium, ConnQuest, are specific issues on which Student Government provided welcome innovations and met the requests of the student body.

The criticism and evaluation will continue and will hopefully be a constant stimulus that will make Student Government truly representative of the student and an actual governing and legislating organ rather than the mouthpiece of the administration or the ineffectual body that its critics have asserted it to be.

Service to others renders a satisfaction greater than that which can be derived from any other form of human experience. The Service League here provides an opportunity for us to give of ourselves in varied and numerous ways — both to those on campus and to those in the surrounding community.

A college experience should lay solid foundations in both the theory and practice of social responsibility. Through the Service League, Connecticut has established the means to realize that goal. Here within the student body, the organization promotes the interest of its members in many phases of campus life — both of a social nature (mixers and all-college functions) and a welfare nature (Community Fund, the Blood Mobile, the Book and Clothing Drive). Equally as important, it works with the citizens of New London and other outside communities in rasing funds for charitable causes, coordinating volunteer programs and other welfare activities, and assisting generally wherever it can be helpful. Programs are presently in effect at Sea Side, Mystic Oral Center, Lawrence Memorial Hospital, and Learned House. Ever aware of the needs of individuals and groups, Service League sponsors various types of entertainment and lucrative projects to raise money for a particular cause, local or national. The program is constantly expanding.

A continued effort is made to foster awareness, interest, and a sense of civic responsibility in the minds of Connecticut students, and to demonstrate that each student is a member of a larger community than that bordered by Williams Street and Mohegan Avenue. Service — to the college and to the community — is the purpose and aim of Service League. In doing things for other people, it is possible not only to enrich their lives, but to find our own greatest fulfillment.

KOINE´ is not merely a tradition. It is a pertinent account of the year.

If it is truly to represent our concerns, it does not separate the academic from the extracurricular, nor isolate the college from the world.

We must work to make what we have learned become a part of us so that we may become a part of what is.

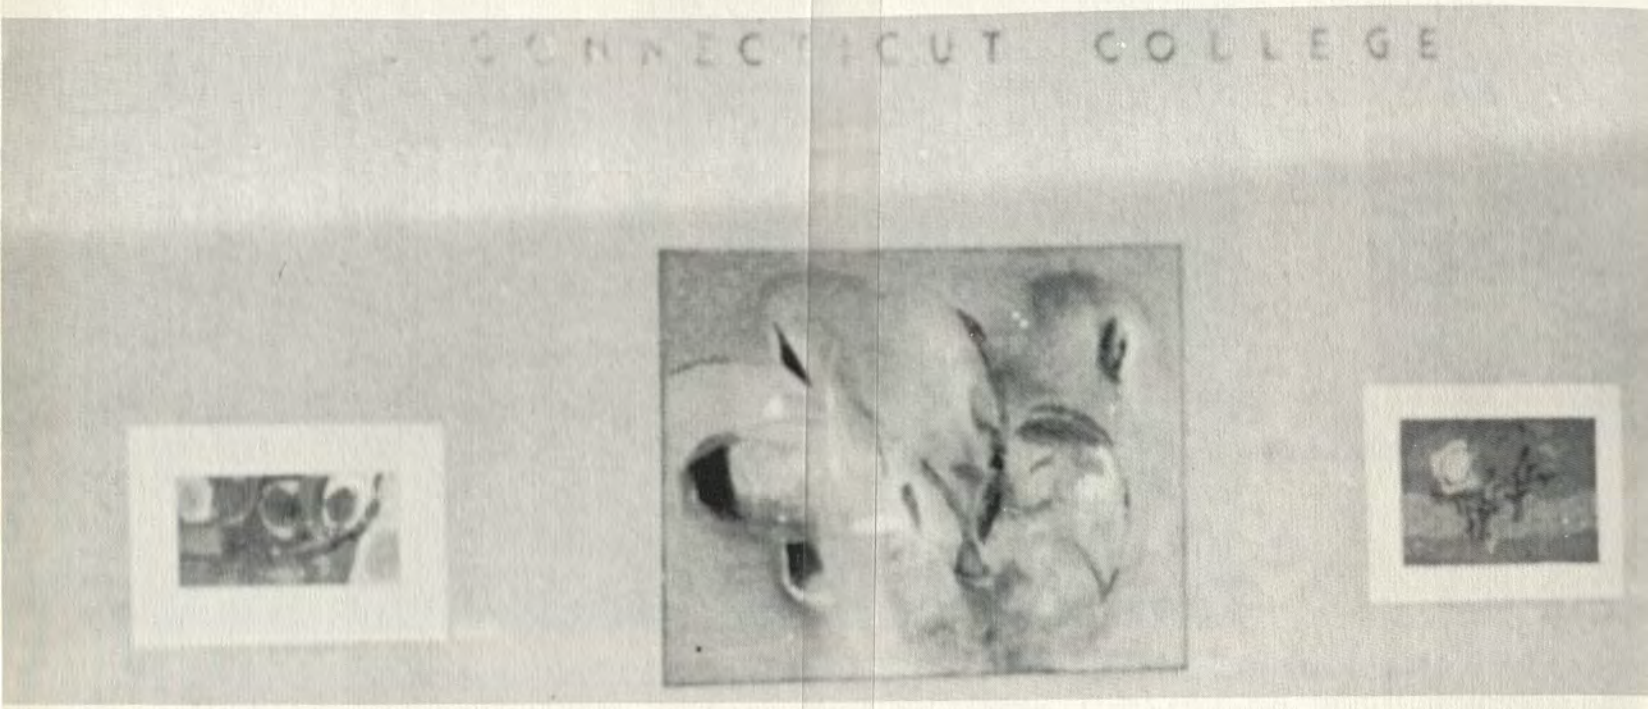
Museum Seminar

Museum Seminar "It was an age of complexities and contradictions. It was the crossroads of the novel and the antique. It was a time for sceptics and critics. It was the age of Victoria." The Seminar class at Lyman Allyn Museum capped a semester's work with the opening of the Victorians, a show aimed at giving the viewer a glimpse into the world of 1837-1901 in the United States and England. Included in an exhibit were costumes, furniture, painting, and decorative arts of the era, many of which were gleaned through the assistance of residents of the New London area.

The Seminar, under the direction of Miss Jane Hayward, curator of Lyman Allyn Museum and professor of Art History, is an educational innovation which has received much praise in bringing the practical experience of museum training to the art history major.



I once heard that Communism is "organized envy." Capitalism, then is "disorganized greed." Man should stop wallowing in materialism, – matter-dreams, and start recognizing spirit. True Art is spiritual. It speaks of beauty and triumph. It is never destructive or ugly. Plato observes: "In the art of the painters and every creative art, ugliness and discord are really allied to evil, just as grace and harmony are to excellence. Those who grow up amid images of moral deformity silently further a festering mass of corruption in their own souls. Let our artists be those who are gifted to discern the true nature of the beautiful then our youth will dwell in a land of wealth amid fair sights and sounds – and beauty shall flow in their eyes and ears like health giving breeze from a purer region." Karen Cornell

. . . what gives art its vitality and effect is not some principle of composition or some ideal of perfection, but a direct expression of feeling, the form corresponding to the feeling, as spontaneous as a gesture, but as enduring as a rock. Elizabeth Saalfield

If art is objective it is superficial. To be realistic it must be subjective. To be effective, it must activate the mind. Margot Adele Sheesley

Music Department

This academic year has been both transitional and productive in the Music Department. The most important change in the department was the appointment of Professor Martha Alter as chairman. Miss Alter has won an enviable reputation as a composer and a teacher. There are also two new members in the department: James F. Armstrong, instructor in music history and director of the Bel Canto Chorus, and Leda T. Hirsch, music librarian. All department members have been active in performance, in composing, and in scholary research. Mr. Dale was heard in a solo piano recital at the College and played a concerto with the Norwich Symphony. He and Mrs. Dale played duo-piano concerts in Hartford and New London. Mrs. Boatwright, accompanied by Mr. Dale, gave solo recitals at Wellesley, Carleton, and Connecticut Colleges, and in Minneapolis. She appeared as soloist in oratorio performances in New York, New Haven and other cities.

Under the direction of Mr. Dendy, the Connecticut College Choir was joined by the Williams College Glee Club at Christmas and performed a Bach Cantata in addition to a new work by Miss Alter. The Bel Canto Chorus was heard in a Christmas concert with the Coast Guard Academy Choir and a spring concert with the Yale Freshmen Glee Club. The Connecticut College Orchestra, Margaret Wiles conductor, played at the Christmas Vesper Service and gave its annual spring concert.

Music courses at Connecticut continue to attract many students and there is at present a fine group of talented music majors — some concentrating in performance and others in history and others in history or theory. The willingness of young women to subject themselves to a hike which would challenge a trained mountain climber at least three times a week bears mute testimony to their interest in music. And the devotion of a highly trained faculty who carry on their work in spite of a woefully inadequate building deserves high praise. Perhaps the most exciting event of the year is the increased talk about a new and functional music building on the campus.—William Dendy

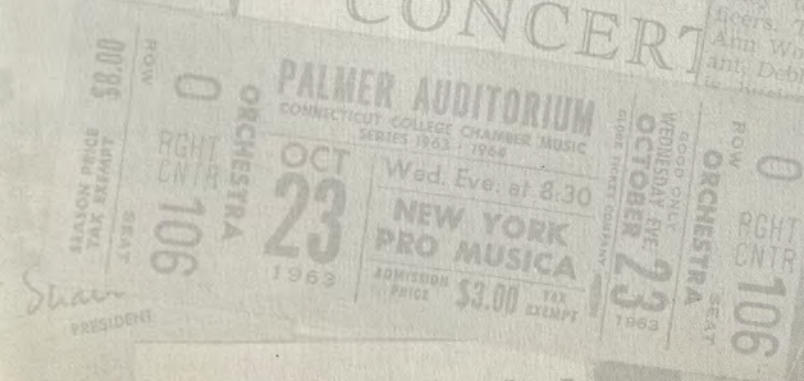
CONCERT



A precocious child, a bewildered secretary, an amorous poet and a zany New Yorker were among the visitors to enliven Palmer Auditorium on the 13th and 14th of December. The Wig and Candle production of Auntie Mame proved to be one of the gayest performances to come to the campus. It gave witness to the fact that "life is a banquet . . . live!" Undismayed by such problems as where to acquire a stuffed fox and how to make the "mamies" flame, the cast and crew, under the direction of Miss Margaret Hazlewood, worked furiously in order to make Auntie Mame one of the most successful productions in the history of Wig and Candle.

In order to maintain a varied program of dramatic events, the organization produced Edward Albee's The American Dream in the spring.

Experimental Theatre Workshop

Experimental Theater lives up to its name. By presenting "Moods of Brecht", the first performance, in Crozier Williams Lounge, a level of intimate rapport between actors and audience was reached that would not have been possible in Palmer Auditorium. The second experiment was the production of Sartre's "Huit Clos" ("No Exit") in French; Ionesco's "Bald Soprano" closed the season.

Informality is stressed in Experimental Theater productions to encourage wider participation and to produce provocative plays without the involvement entailed in a major production.

After two years of silence WCNI, the college radio station, returned to the air April, 1963. The station broadcasts weekdays for four evening hours and a half-hour each morning. Each two hour program has a crew of two or three to share announcing and technical duties; over thirty girls have worked on WCNI since April.

Fundamentally a music station, WCNI features the Jazz Spot and Folk Show as regular programs. Music 109 listening assignments are broadcast as a public service. Mr. Romoser of the Government Department analyzed the news each week of the first semester. Campus news and dramatic presentations rounded out the programming. It is the intention of WCNI to produce more varied programs including some original creations of college community members. There is also the hope of being able to record and later broadcast some of the talks sponsored by clubs and academic departments.

In February and March WCNI representatives participated with WYBC, Yale's radio station, in an exchange program called "Contact". The exchange was both entertaining and illuminating. Participants were dazzled by WYBC's record library and equipment.

Connecticut's is a young station with ambitions. WCNI hopes to develop a library of records and tapes and eventually expand broadcasting facilities. The immediate aim is to master the problems of "teching" and beat the boosters into submission. "This year," says Chairman Flora Barth, "we were grateful to be on the air."

The Freshman picnic, a relaxation-conversation break at the close of Freshman week, opened the Athletic Association social calendar. Next came the college's annual Halloween Party for Learned House and faculty children with the Great Pumpkin and costumes and cider and donuts and fun. Learned House children returned for an afternoon of supervised play in Crozier Williams.

Sportsday in Febuary brought guests from nearby colleges. Connecticut performed well but the most popular game of the day was "Do-you-know".

Inter-class and inter-dorm sports were among the activities successfully sponsored by Athletic Association, the organization that exists to maintain the much-desired informal relationships that result from such activities.

A new aspect to the study of science here is a course in Radiation Biology. The course was established by Dr. John F. Kent, chairman of the Zoology Department, and has been enriched by the acquisiton of new equipment, bought with the aid of two Educational Equipment Assistance grants from the Atomic Energy Commission. The Radiation Biology course aims to familiarize students with the safe and intelligent use of radioactive isotopes, to study the effects of radiation and radioactive materials on living organisms, and to furnish a beginning knowledge of the uses of radioactive materials in medicine and biological research.

After a basic training in the use of radioactive isotopes and radiation counting equipment, students do experimental studies on the genetic and pathological effects of radiation. Special precautions are taken to keep track of radiation dosages received by persons using the laboratory and to control the radioactive isotopes which are used. The fourth floor of New London Hall has been outfitted to ensure maximum safety and admission to the laboratory is restricted to students and instructors.

According to Miss Julia Bower, Chairman of the Mathematics Department, there is a noticeable trend toward more well-prepared Freshmen entering this field. In order to meet the demands of the advanced incoming students, the Department is undertaking a revision of the curriculum for next year, which will involve new courses as well as the upgrading of some old ones. Miss Bower draws attention to the fact that Connecticut College itself is partly responsible for the excellent preparation of new students, at least in this area, through the weekly meetings here of 35 New London area secondary school teachers at a National Science Foundation Institute course in geometry. The course is taught by Miss Hostinsky.

Miss Hostinsky was also chosen to act this year as visiting lecturer for the Mathematical Association of America. Her position has taken her to Wellesley College and Farleigh Dickinson among others.

During the year, the Mathematics Club usually hears students give papers of their own. Once a year there is an outside speaker, this year being Mr. Pierce from Electric Boat Company, who spoke here on computing. The Mathematics Department as a whole sponsors such lectures as Professor Ore from Yale who spoke on the history of probability.

Two of the four mathematics majors of this year's class have done individual study. Judy Cosler worked with Miss Hostinsky on Boolean Algebra and Susan Weingarten worked on the linear space theory with Mr. Schlesinger. These girls are two of twelve students awarded a National Science Foundation grant through Wesleyan University for individual study

Friday, October 25th, the College held a Disaster Drill during which members of the college community were urged to respond to the three minute blast by taking cover in the lowest floor of the building in which they were at the time. The purpose of the drill was to prepare the campus to respond to a warning in case of a real emergency from the forces of nature or from military forces.

Several faculty members and students simultaneously staged a protest demonstration and called for all members of the college community to join them outside of New London Hall during the take-cover period. Maintaining that the purpose of the drill was ambiguous and asserting the unrealistic approach to civil defense that such drills present, the group urged all who came to listen or "protest," to realize the imminence of the nuclear threat, and start positive work for peace. The negative "ostrich-like" attitude of seeking shelter is, according to Barbara Brodsky, a "sentencing of mankind to a horrible, impending death."

One of the most predictable aspects of behavior is its variability. The Psychology Department presents a curriculum and faculty that takes account of this variability. The programs for study include new experimental areas that make use of equipment received from a National Science Foundation grant. In addition a Visiting-Speakers Colloquium has brought several outstanding speakers to the campus sponsored jointly by the National Science Foundation and the American Psychological Association. The Psychology Club has also sponsored distinguished speakers and have worked in organizing companionship programs for help to the mentally ill adults and retarded children. The Psychology Journal is another unique aspect of this popular and active department. In recognition of extensive undergraduate research projects and independent study, the Psychology Club and the Department formulated the idea of a Connecticut College Psychology Journal. The first publication of a professional nature to appear on the campus appeared in the spring of 1964. Its purpose is the communication of the nature and results of undergraduate research, not only to other members of the college community, but also to other psychology departments across the country. The editorial board which reviews contributions is composed of psychology majors from the three upper classes: Barrie Butler and Judith Krieger; Katie Colson ond Barbara Goldman; and Nancy Anton.

The policy of the journal is to encourage contributions from undergraduates in every department. The articles in the first issue of the journal illustrate broad interest. Contributions from the Psychology Department include a research paper on the nature of schizophrenia and an empirical study of the incubation of fear in rats; from philosophy of science, a review of Freudian psychoanalytic theory; and from the Region Department, an investigation of Jung. Work from the Zoology Department has special relevance: a paper on the physiology of the reticular formation appeared and a chapter from an independent study of animal communication in bees was selected. From the Art Department a paper was submitted relating theories in art to the work of a contemporary perception theorist in psychology. Ideally the journal will be an impetus for additional valuable research by undergraduates.

Honor's Study: Holly Lee Schanz

"As my honor's project this year, I have been studying the work of the great lyric poet of the Roman Republic, Gaius Valerius Catullus. Last Fall, I began my study by reading fragments of the Greek and Alexandrian lyric poets in order to see the ways in which Catullus was carrying on their traditions or being an innovator. For my paper I am concentrating upon certain poems which demonstrate the Catullan psychology in their intensity and involvement in friendship, love, and political and personal hatred. In these poems I am examining the themes and stylistic devices which Catullus uses to express his emotions; from this I hope to distil not merely the poetic theory of Catullus, but even more his response to the human experience and his personal concept of pietas."

The Club

The organization and existence of "the Club," named for Samuel Johnson's club, are as tenuous to its student members as to those who question them about it. In the sponsorship of poetry readings, members of "the Club" find themselves the advertisers, drummers, P.O. Box-Stuffers, and hostesses. The actual inviting of the poets is somewhat mysterious, out of the students' hands.

A delightful reading was given in the fall by Mr. X. J. Kennedy. In the winter, the mentor and organization-man of "The Club," Mr. William Meredith, gave a fine reading. While we were still sharply aware of President Kennedy's death, Mr. Meredith read a poem which took us back nearly a year to the tragedy of the Thresher. Juxtaposed to this poem were poems which he described as "about optimism."

Seniors remember readings by Anthony Hecht, John Berryman, Daryl Hine, Robert Frost, W. H. Auden, and others. The voices of the poets do not leave when the readings are over.

AN UBI SUNT

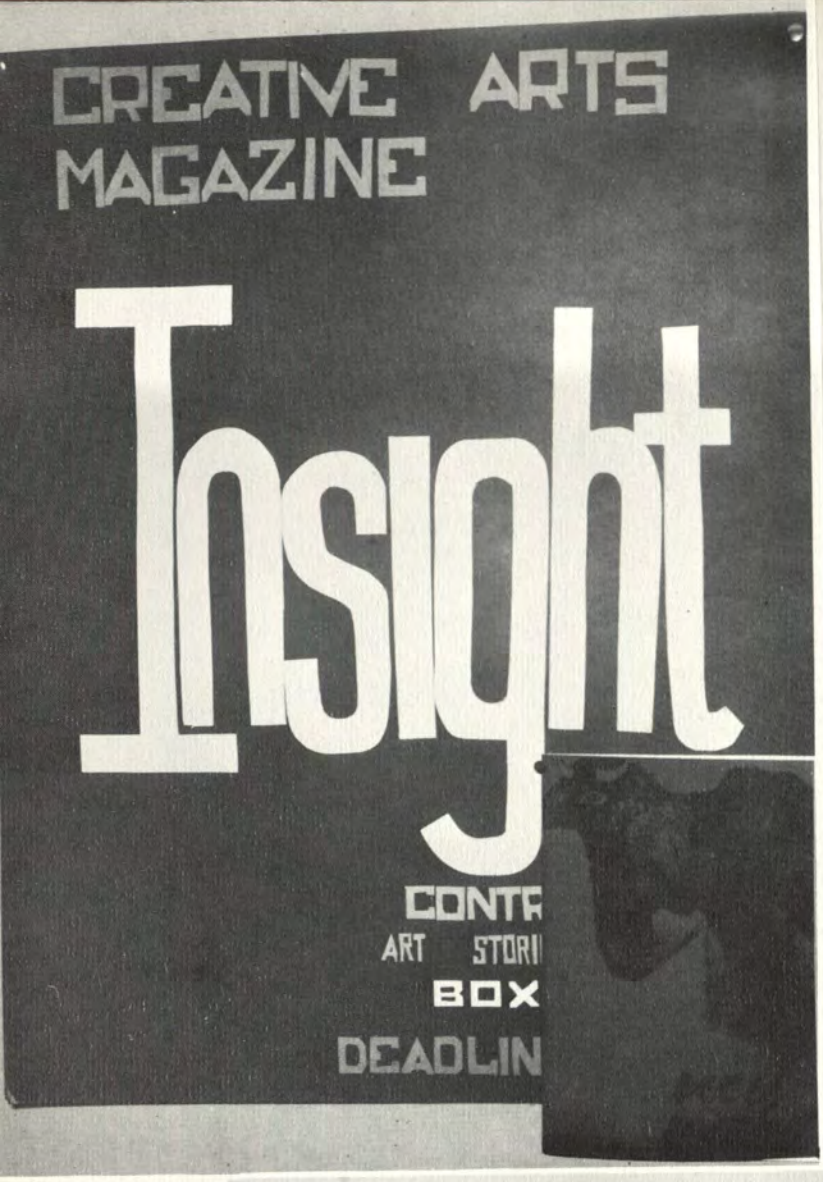
Somewhere between the time that I decide
And starting, is where I hear the past,
Seductive as the sailor-luring sea,
Singing come-all-you's. And then it seems
That I once was dazzled and danced with
Many a fair field of folk, that the things
I was included in then were far and away.

The fact is, no fell so rocky bleak,
Enterprise or love so weary thin,
But the singer past will turn a taking phrase
Making them foreign and the heart's.

It seems there's no forgetting.
Shaking the head, refuse to be bemused,



The circulation of a creative arts magazine is as important to its vitality as are the variety of its contributions; the publication is primarily geared toward the young artist testing her attempts against the reading public. For this reason the editorial policy for recent issues of Insight has aimed at enlisting the support of the reader as well as that of the contributor.

However, a magazine can also have integrity in itself. In the past two issues the editors have experimented with motif drawings, layout, color and varying type in an effort to produce something more than a pamphlet of student work.

Conn Census: 1963-64 was a year in which the mood of the College strongly reflected the emotions of a nation. This year we saw Conn Census meet and respond to the demands of a maturing college community. The newspaper fulfilled the role of a campus publication by providing a source of stimulation in the presentation of new and challenging ideas, and by making the campus aware of more than just the currently controversial.

Technical revisions accompanied this extension of interest. The format of the newspaper changed noticeably. The paper was delivered to every mailbox on Friday mornings. Cartoons and news photographs became regular features, and students and faculty looked forward to reading six full pages of news and features.

Conn Census maintained itself as a topic of conversation. It was criticized for showing partiality in favor of Civil Rights and against Student Government, but was equally partial to Alvin Ailey and Albert Finney and critical of the Religious Fellowship troika and the people who did not respond in print. Letters were no longer written just to the editor, but also to anyone who might have shared her views. Issues and battles taken on by ondividuals became public as views on Student Government, Civil Rights, Community Defense and something called, "Conservative Antinotes," were read and responded to. Conn Census in fact caused an uproar as mounting inconsistencies in the honor system brought suggestions for overall reevaluation.

An ad for "Curse You, Jack Dalton," appeared under the picture of Sunday's Vespers speaker. Critical and penetrating studies were undertaken of the New London Railroad Station, James Bond, the Beatles and of a book called The Garden Gait, whose author, plot, publisher and awards were the creation of a Conn Census writer. The newspaper loved laughing at these jokes, but would have welcomed being challenged on its sense of humor. How horrifying to fool all the people some of the time.

There is perhaps no academic field which offers so directly an opportunity for the integration of education and practice as the field of foreign languages. The kind of exchange made possible through the use of a common language is a treasure always available for the well trained student, at home or abroad. Connecticut students have taken advantage of this opportunity beginning with their classroom instruction and their language club activities here, and extending first to their acquaintance with the foreign students on this campus and then to living, studying, and travelling experiences in other parts of the world. The past summer found students at school, at work, or travelling in all parts of Europe, in Russia, India, Iran, and South America. The academic year was spent by several juniors in Italy, Switzerland, France, and Greece, on such programs as the College Year in Athens, the Smith College Junior Year Abroad, and the Syracuse Program.

Within the college, several French students have lived together in one dormitory for the second year, the idea behind the French House being to improve the knowledge of the language through use. Students of other languages have gathered on certain floors of other dormitories and are awaiting more members of the groups, eventually enough to comprise entire houses. The girls agree that when they do manage to "live in French" the experience is a profitable one, the main problem, however, being a tendency to revert quite often to English.

The language clubs seem to draw the most attendance to their meetings when the subject matter of the lecture or discussion is contemporary. The German Club has been a pioneer in this direction. Dr. Kurt Opitz presented an intricate paper on the awareness of the modern implications of reality as manifested in German Literature of the Twentieth Century. Hermann Broch, Uwe Johnson, and Martin Walser were the authors treated.

The Foreign Student Advisor, Kathy Diehr, has found great value in her work with the foreign students here:

It is now difficult for me to think of the foreign students as "foreign," just as it was hard, before knowing them, to imagine them apart from their different countries. When I met them at the station, I didn't expect to see them look so American. Right away they seemed confident and very much at home, in spite of their occasional peculiar usages of the English language. Now they are acquainted with our American slang but they use it sparingly.

Foreign Students

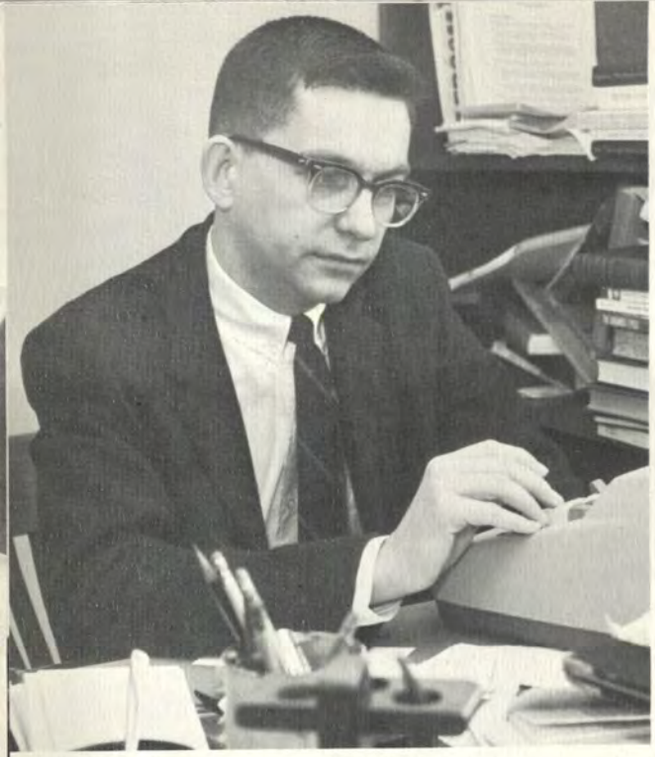
They have been quick in their understanding of American customs; they have participated in many different activities on the campus; and they have been particularly helpful in the language laboratory. They have shared in the concerns of the College and have been guests at many civic clubs in the New London area. I am reminded quite often of the foreign backgrounds of the students when I hear, for example, that the Beatles would never be allowed in the Vienna concert hall, or that American paperbacks are sold abroad. The girls from Sweden, Japan, Holland, Austria, Finland, Argentina, and Switzerland have really become friends of the persons they have met here, and we will remember them in a special way. If they have learned about us, they have, at the same time, taught us — much more than they realize.

On the other side of the ocean, the Experiment in International Living has attracted many girls in recent years. A Freshman, Emily Tischler, reflects on her 1962 experiment in Holland:

I was not only expected to act as an ambassador of the United States, but also able to adapt successfully to a different culture. The experience, which may begin from selfish motives, becomes thoroughly enriching for entirely reasons than personal satisfaction. One must exercise self-control and develop good judgment in everyday dealings as a representative of our country. This takes maturity, stamin, and plain endurance throughout the stay in a foreign country. If these qualities are not present at the journey's commencement, they undoubtedly will have developed by its end. The experiment thus benefits one's growth as an individual. The experiment is also unquestionably successful in promoting world relations. Without the bias of propaganda present, two different ideas can be discussed and reasons for the respective viewpoints can be clarified. Through association with individuals from different countries, one realizes the insignificance of preconceived notions, all too often false ones, about a particular national group. It was meaningful to tour Holland with a native (my Dutch sister) and to see her pride in her national and historic institutions. From the two weeks spent in a four-room farm house to the hours spent in the Rijks Museum, I was absorbed in a life full of cheerful, optimistic, benevolent and purposeful Dutch citizens. One of the most valuable insights was to learn how little material wealth can mean to a people as a whole, how much more important aesthetic beauty can be. Ever since, my own world, still narrow in perspective, has seemed a little more beautiful, a little more meaningful.



Economics Department: The recent growth in the number of economics majors is a reflection of the increased attraction which the field of economics has for women every year. Within the department here, each faculty member is able to convey interest in a certain field of specialization through his or her one advanced course taught each semester. Discussion in these classes includes both the theoretical and practical sides of the American and international economic scene. Often seminars are held with local business and labor leaders, stock brokers and politicians. Outside the classroom, there are numerous opportunities to synthesize and apply the knowledge gained. In the fall, any major who wishes may attend the annual Chamber of Commerce Conference, especially for the purpose of hearing a more conservative view. There are also conferences at Yale on the economic implications of automation and the shorter work week, the annual conference of the American Economic Association which is held over Christmas vacation, and the spring International Relations Club Conference weekend at Connecticut. All of these are attended on a purely voluntary basis and aid the student in achieving a better understanding of present-day economic problems.

The Class of 1964 founded an Economics Club here in the hope of bringing interested and interesting speakers to Connecticut. One meeting discussed the controversy over the "American Way of Dying," and another meeting entitled "India: An Underdeveloped Country," defined the problems of underdeveloped countries, the reasons for concern about India, and the recent progress in the aid being given there.

The Editor
New London Day
47 Main Street
New London, Connecticut

Dear Sir:

Aware that I speak for a minority of probably one, I still cannot withhold a few words about the New London railroad station and its future.

Whether or not one likes its looks — and I do — it should be remembered that it is an important building in the history of American architecture. One of the last works of H. H. Richardson, it is also the only large railroad station he designed. Richardson is now accepted by critics and scholars as one of the major American designers of the tradition leading to the best modern American architecture.

The magnificent masonry of the Union station is one of the few surviving examples of what could be accomplished in an era when builders were thoroughly trained craftsmen and not mere expediters of cheapness.

In this building the masonry is allowed to express its own weight and texture in a noble scheme of proportions true to the function of enclosing space for an unconstricted flow of traffic. Despite the appalling shabbiness of the building at present, it retains many consistent architectural details, inside and out.

Apart from its historical and artistic importance, this building remains one of the very few important buildings left in New London. Is it necessary to destroy every vestige of distinction that this city possesses? It's obvious that "redevelopment" has in other cities produced ugliness beyond that of the most morbid slums: expedient boxes that will decay faster than Victorian monuments. This is what New London seems to be heading for, without even a majestic hulk as counterpoint to glass crates and their asphalt wrappings.

Sociology

Seated: J. Macklin, R. J. R. Kennedy, Chairman
Standing: V. Vidich, M. T. Record

The Sociology Department is a center from which students and faculty have been able to move out into the New London area, not only to apply their knowledge in the field for the purposes of bettering community relations, but also to gain new knowledge through research. The constant need for improvement and the constant desire to understand more deeply the various social phenomena have been a challenge to members of this department.

In connection with her interest in minority groups and their problems, Miss Macklin has recently begun a community survey with the Puerto Rican New Londoners. Hope Batchelder has done individual study on the culturating influence of the public schools on their students, American and foreign. Mrs. Kennedy's social welfare course includes visits to local agencies and institutions such as the Welfare Department and the Niantic State Farm for Women. Hillary Harrington has done individual study at the Juvenile Court in New London. Mrs. Kennedy has worked on a study of mentally retarded persons, and on the woman offender, the latter from study and observation in Niantic.

Participants in such activities of the Sociology Department have found themselves dealing with real problems and continue to profit from the quest for solutions.

Community Projects: In addition to the Service League and Sociology Department activities in New London, there have been other undertakings by students and faculty as individuals and in groups. The vigorous participation in several programs is encouraging to see, especially in light of usual comments and complaints about the lack of student commitment or the tendency of students to lapse into an ivory tower world. In the spring of 1963 the Civil Rights Group saw a need and decided to do something about it. From this beginning, there has grown a tutorial program that today involves 40 Connecticut undergraduates who have volunteered their time and energy to tutor New London High School Students. Originally instituted with the cooperation of the Northern Student Movement to eliminate high school dropouts among Negro students, the program is now biracial and includes students not only with academic problems but also those with special ambitions. The reward and enjoyment of all those participating in the program is extremely satisfying and encouraging.

Miss Torrey of the Psychology Department has long been involved in many aspects of the racial situation and is presently doing work in New London for the NAACP Voter Registration Drive. She has the help of interested students, who will hopefully remain actively involved through the fall elections. Miss Torrey has also worked on housing legislation concerning discrimination, which is especially timely during the present area Urban Renewal Project.

History Club was started on campus to provide an opportunity outside of the classroom for students and faculty interested in the study of history to meet informally and exchange views on a wide variety of subjects. In this, its first year on campus, it had two meetings in which the topics "What is History?" and "Revolutions" were explored by students and faculty together. We look forward in the coming year to a varied program which will include more discussion, reading of faculty and student papers, and exchanges with other History Clubs in the area.

Under the auspices of the Government Department, Connecticut College participates in the Mount Holyoke-Amherst Summer Internship in Washington, D. C. This program places some forty students in agencies and offices of the Federal Government. It also provides a series of lectures and discussions with key public figures in Washington.

During the summer of 1963, four students, government majors, Susan Epstein, Mary Lanphier, Susan Mann and Evelyn Marcus, had appointments with Congressmen and congressional committees, the Department of Agriculture and the Peace Corps. The experience and knowledge gained from this summer's work was unique. The interns agreed that their positions provided them with an opportunity to see the governmental process in action — an insight that a textbook or classroom discussion can not present.

The program, and affiliated activities, also allowed students to question and converse with national figures such as James Hoffa, Senator Goldwater, and Attorney General Robert Kennedy. The White House Seminars, an innovation of the Kennedy Administration, were weekly lectures by important public figures including the then Vice President Johnson, Secretary of Defense McNamara, and the summer ended with a speech by President Kennedy.

A series of lectures and an annual Conference on World Affairs are the principal features of the International Relations Club's program. The Club sponsored a lecture by Sir Hugh Foot on the emerging nations, with a focus on the effects of colonialism in Africa. Sir Hugh was the last British Governor of Cyprus and was recently made head of the United Nation's committee looking into racial discrimination and problems. His lecture and willingness to answer questions and discuss issues was a valuable opportunity for students, faculty and Coast Guardsmen to benefit from his timely experience, controversial opinions, and a wide range of knowledge. Later in the Fall, Miss Marjorie Dilley, chairman of the Government Department, showed slides and spoke about East Africa, where she had been teaching and travelling during the academic year, 1962-63. A lecture on India, by Mr. Robert Guadino of Williams College, presented a picture of Indian psychology and social phenomena.

The Club's annual conference was devoted to the political, economic and cultural relations of Europe and the United States since the war. Speakers included author, John Lukacs, Consuls from France, Britain, and West Germany, and Mr. Kenneth Auchincloss, Special Representative for Trade Relations in the White House.

A lecture on the Arab-Israel border dispute, attendance by IRC members at other conferences at other colleges, and participation in the annual UNICEF Christmas Card Sale, extend the activities of this Club off the campus into the larger sphere of general student concern with world affairs.

The Young Democrats have finally coalesced into an active organization and have already found themselves steeped in Connecticut politics. The club is planning to attend the College and State conventions this spring and then roll out the bandwagon for the election in the fall. Also being considered is a study of poverty in the New London area as a small part of the large campaign forwarded by President Johnson. The Young Democrats also hope to bring a key national figure to the campus in the fall. The main focus, however, will be directed toward local and state politics and national campaign issues.

The Young Republican Club was created to provide interested students with a knowledge of the theories and practices of the Republican party at every level of government. Movies, speakers, and other educational media are used to achieve the goals of the organization. Students interested in participating in politics at a local level frequently campaign in the community or held staff headquarters during elections. Several programs are coordinated with the New London County Young Republicans. As a member of the Connecticut Organization of College Young Republicans and the New England College Caucus, communications are maintained with state and national affiliations.

The Civil Rights Club dedicated its conference to the memory of John F. Kennedy. The purpose in doing so, however, was not merely to perpetuate his memory, but rather to impress upon all present the degeneracy of this country which has appeared in the form of violence, hatred, inequalities, and the fact that there are millions of Americans who are only allowed to be half citizens. This problem is becoming so vast that it effects all, and all must be made aware of their role in its solution.

From these negative beginnings came what proved to be an extremely positive weekend. The conference introduced to this campus an area of reality from which most of us had been protected, problems which did not effect most of us directly but problems which are our responsibility to solve and to solve now.

There are those who were not reached by the conference. Many others, however, will never forget it. Its success cannot be measured, nor is there the necessity to do so. If it and other experiences like it have had an effect on this country, it will be seen in the revolution which is going on in this country, North and South.

—Karen Kunstler
Chairman, Civil Rights Conference

Peter Countryman, the founder of the Northern Student Movement, concentrated his talk on the specific work he had done in Harlem. He stressed the importance of student participation in the NSM tutorial program to raise educational levels and the need as well for many small local projects oriented to make the Negro aware of his situation and the possibilities open to him to change his environment.

Bayard Rustin was the main speaker of the Civil Rights Conference. Committed to the Ghandian principle of non-violent civil disobedience, he is deeply dedicated to the idea of improving the economic condition of all Americans. The main point of his argument was that automation has eliminated the number of jobs necessary for full employment. The solution to this problem lies in action on the part of the federal government to create jobs or check the trend of automation. From improvement in the economic area, educational, political, and cultural advances would follow. Mr. Rustin's message of brotherhood in the face of a common plight and the complexity of the economic situation had a tremendous effect which could be seen in the Saturday workshops. William Higgs and Reverend Andrew Young, who is in charge of voter registration for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, conducted talks respectively on the civil rights bill and on the economic, educational, and political problems facing the Negro in Mississippi. Mr. Christianson, chairman of the Chemistry Department, led the workshop in the technique of non-violence. Robert Gore of CORE discussed voter registration; Dr. Edwin Edmunds, of the Connecticut Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission, discussed this committee's role in employment, which has involved research on available positions and then job retraining; and Percy Sutton, a NAACP attorney, discussed the plight of the urban Negro in New York City.

Religion

J. Purvis, Acting Chairman; R. Ward

The most interesting development in the area of religious concern on the campus has been the resurgence of that concern, now that the chapel requirement is non-existent. Most impressive has been the participation in the newly formed religious groups on campus. The presence here of a Catholic, Protestant, Jewish and Christian Science groups, launched by Religious Fellowship, is a long awaited innovation and a definite asset. The cooperation of these groups, the Religious Fellowship, and the Religion Department has produced an enticing program of lectures presented regularly throughout the year. The first semester lectures were on Religious Issues in Modern Literature, for which faculty members were invited to speak. Mr. Bieber, Mr. Bredeson, Mr. Baird, Mr. Willauer, Mr. Purvis, Dean Noyes, and Mr. Meredith spoke on Camus, Mark Twain, Melville, Tennessee Williams, Graham Greene, Thomas Hardy, and Robert Frost respectively. The presentation of religious themes in coordination with familiar material has made new approaches to religion evident and has suddenly made the offerings of the religious organizations more palatable. The second semester series concerned Religious Issues in the Arts. The lectures ranged from further discussions of literature, including works of T. S. Eliot and Henry James, to dramatic monologues by Don Campbell, to Mr. McCloy's discussion of Roualt. The program as a whole has been much appreciated and hopefully will be expanded in the future.

Another element of interest has been the Religious Fellowship's recent establishment of a tutorial project of its own, on the elementary school level. The program is designed to help pupils who have poor backgrounds in reading, arithmetic, spelling, writing, or English conversation. The main concentration is on young Negro students whose parents would like them to have special help. The class meets at Learned House twice a week. The program was begun through the Shiloh Baptist Church in New London and is now being expanded to include other churches.

Senior Symposium: Within the Philosophy Department, as on the campus generally, there is the constant desire to bring the faculty and the students together in closer social and academic relations. The situation is not uncommon in a growing community where the units of professor and student perpetually increase in size and become more occupied with their own divergent concerns. The tendency is toward a series of large lectures in which the professor serves as a medium for communicating the ideas of other thinkers to the diligent note-taking students. This problem could never have occurred in the ideal educational system of the Greeks. For them, education was a dialogue between the younger citizens and the wiser, elder citizens who did not lecture but strove along with their students to find the truth. Patterned after Plato's "Symposium" and the Platonic idea that knowledge can only be attained through the dialectic of conversation, the Philosophy Department and its senior majors have instituted a Senior Symposium. This group meets at Mr. Jordan's home every month. Each meeting is based on a contemporary article selected for the discussion and read by all participants beforehand. The discussion, however is open-ended and thus serves the belief that philosophy is the inquiry into any human concern. The meetings give both students and faculty the opportunity to get to know one another and to discuss a wide range of problems. In an atmosphere of informal familiarity, both the faculty members and the students have been surprised and pleased to see how much everyone has to say. The exchange has been the kind which might never have taken place in the more rigid classroom atmosphere. These meetings have been experimental this year, but their excellent results have insured the permanence of this institution for all senior philosophy majors to anticipate and enjoy.

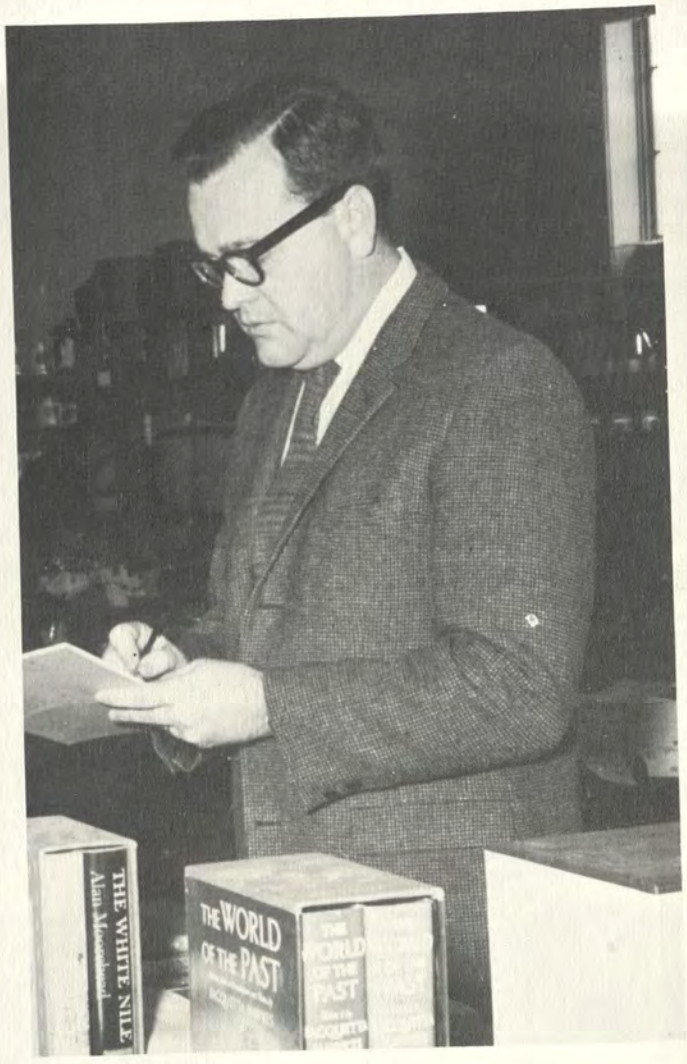
More periodicals, a lending library, a larger gift shop, more food, more books, an extensive art section, more check out counters, wonderful half price sales, Playboy magazine, photography service, shelves for books and packages, Christmas cards galore, Valentines, paperbacks shelved according to subject, Pakistani handicraft, tam o'shanters, Crest toothpaste, records, and lavender sweatshirts: these are some of the changes and improvements we've seen at the Bookstore in recent years. The Bookstore is a land in which to browse and spend, occasionally overpay or come out ahead.

Mr. Hale has not yet exhausted the possibilities for innovations. Charge accounts and student discounts are being discussed, as are new types of inventory and selling methods.



CONNQUEST 1964: "Student Commit

PURPOSE:

ConnQuest is a student sponsored symposium, the first of its kind to be held on the Connecticut College campus. This intercollegiate conference will provide students with an opportunity to explore the problems and demands of contemporary society. Through an interchange of ideas, students, faculty, and lecturers will seek to bridge the gap between classrooms and community.

The topic of ConnQuest, 1964, is "Commitment and Action". Spurred by recent world crises, the modern student has been forced to reevaluate his goals, and to rechannel his energies. The modern student cannot avoid his responsibilities to the community, which has provided him the opportunity to realize his potential through higher education. Society demands selflessness; only in the fulfillment of society's goals can the individual find meaning. Commitment to the solution of a specific social problem enables the student to assert his individuality in the context of the modern world. Complacency is outmoded. Mere recognition of contemporary problems provides no solution. Commitment demands action.

ConnQuest will provide the stimulus. You must seek the solution.

ment and Action"

PAUL GOODMAN is a sociologist, philosopher, poet, critic, and "Pied Piper". He was educated at the City College of New York and received his doctorate from the University of Chicago. Dr. Goodman prompts epithets: he is "our only creative social thinker", a man of "contradictory intelligence", a "utopian theorist". Certainly, Dr. Goodman has provoked controversy by his twelve books and numerous articles. Goodman's anarchical theory concerning man and his scale of values in contemporary society can be seen in Growing Up Absurd, Drawing the Line, The Facts of Life and Making Do. Dr. Goodman has often been quoted for his candid remarks. "If I can think it, I can write it". He has also said, "If people are not somehow greater, more portentous, than human, they are not human at all . . . People are either remarkable or batty". Dr. Goodman is of the former breed.

ROBERT JAY LIFTON is Foundations Fund for Research Associate professsor of Psychiatry at Yale University. He is interested in the relationship between individual character and historical change, particularly in China and Japan, and in problems of individual behavior in extreme situations. Recently he spent two and a half years in Japan, where he studied the psychological effects of the atomic bomb and patterns in Japanese youth. Dr. Lifton attended Cornell and received his M.D. from New York Medical College. From 1956 to 1961 he held research and teaching appointments at Harvard University. An accomplished and perceptive lecturer, he is also the author of Thought Reform and the Psychology of Totalism: A study of "Brainwashing" in China.

HAROLD TAYLOR is an educator who "practices what he preaches". As President of Sarah Lawrence College for fourteen years he introduced new progressive scholastic methods. After taking his Ph.D. in philosophy at the University of London, Dr. Taylor was appointed to the philosophy faculty of the University of Wisconsin. He is currently a research psychologist, lecturer, and author, famed for his provocative and original thinking in the field of American education. In Art and the Intellect Dr. Taylor asked: "Why then, in a country . . . so concerned for education, so full of idealism and opportunity for every kind of cultural advantage, should there be a confusion of aims and a lack of intellectual purpose?"

Earlier this year we received reports that Rosemary Park, now President of Barnard College, was concerned about a lack of motivation among college women. She cited the need for consideration of the meaning of individual academic honor, but most of all for an awakening to our extra-academic responsibilities. Having known Miss Park, we can imagine her advocation and approval of the far reaching concern displayed by Connecticut students during the Conn Quest weekend. The questions asked and the answers proposed at Connecticut's first student colloquim are partially a lasting reflection of Miss Park's years here.

Goodman: What are you for?
Boys from Yale stand for nothing.
They don't love the stars, they all imagine
Astronomy is something you master.

Taylor: Perhaps we're over
Some of the humps that Goodman sees ahead of him.
The prep school concept of education has been outdated
By the reality of the student.

Taylor: I don't see a division between
Those with a passion to be socially helpful
And those with a passion for literature.
College education should be reorganized so that they don't have
To beat the order in order to be passionate.

Goodman: We've come to expect noisy social action from Puerto Ricans, Negroes, and SNCC guerilla fighters.
But I find it hard to be optimistic.
Are they alone to support change?

The Up And Coming Generation

We are the up and coming generation,
And we've come to pave the way.
And as the up and coming generation
We've important things to say.

Step aside, please, as forward we come
Full force with vigor, too.
We are the up and coming generation
To our country true.

The young are strong and ready to lead.
We are bold and brave and new.
Do not ask again what you can do.
It's now what we can do for you.

We are the up and coming generation.
Aren't you glad to have us here?
And as the up and coming generation
There is nothing left to fear.

As the newest of the new frontier
We'll put the old to shame
We are the up and coming generation
Moving on to fame.

Félicitations

La Maison Française

Under prevailing tax-rates, someone had to earn and set aside 14, 20 or 30 Thousand Dollars for each girl's education at Connecticut College. Rejoice that this advantage has been yours and be ever mindful that America's free market economy and free enterprise incentives, impaired though they be, still made your four years here a happy reality.

Should you wish your own children and theirs to enjoy similar training, choose a husband who will join with you in opposing Federal "Aid" or Federal intervention as the cure for every social ill or economic shortcoming we encounter.
