DEDICATION: MARGARET WATSON

There is perhaps no other administrator who affects Connecticut College students on a daily basis more than Margaret Watson, Dean of Student Activities. Marg constantly keeps abreast of all student affairs by involving herself in many areas of College life. As Dean, she is charged with the responsibility of housing, campus security, and virtually all student extracurricular endeavors. Not only is she a champion of student causes, but also a person who empathizes with students' needs.

Marg Watson has the talent for dealing with students as equals and individuals, without compromising her position as Dean. Her ability to develop a clear perspective on the issues and factors involved in any situation enables her to give valuable assistance and direction to students who seek her advice.

A woman of versatile talents — mediator, diplomat, and confidante — she is easily recognized as one of the mainstays of this college community. It is without hesitation and with gratitude that we proudly dedicate Koiné 1976 to Dean Margaret Watson.

ADMINISTRATION AND FACULTY

From the President

Last year, a graduate of our college told a group of alumni that the liberal education she received here had meant increasingly more to her with the passage of time. From the vantage point of her experience, she looked back on the college years with a heightened sense of their value.

We hope for each of you that the understanding you have acquired through your work will serve to enrich all avenues of your life, that the liberating process of learning will not slacken after you leave Connecticut, and that you too will find increasing value in the education you gained at this college.

When I first came to Connecticut College, more than twenty years ago, to be interviewed for an instructorship in English, the first person to greet me, in Fanning Hall, was Jane Smyser. Her behavior was beautifully characteristic. She did not reveal by word, tone, or glance that I had, all unwittingly, arrived on the wrong day. Her manners were, always, as impeccable as her scholarship.

Today my head and heart are full of memories of Jane throughout those speeding twenty-two years — almost a quarter of a century, but at this moment the time seems sadly short. I shall plead the privilege of an old and devoted friend, and speak very personally of some of those many memories: a few stormy ones, some wonderfully funny, some highly instructive, some deeply moving — all treasures now, although still life.

I remember Jane laughing and swapping stories at the Snack Bar. "And O! but she had stories. . . ." That line and two following ones, "To keep the soul of man alive, / Banish age and care," are appropriate for Jane; and I like recalling them here because I know she liked them. They are from a poem we taught together once, a long time ago. I remember Jane laboring over the departmental schedule when she was chairman, determined that every one should have exactly the schedule of his choice. I remember her playing charades, and the lovely mischievous smile on her face when she managed to give me the word oleaginous to act out. I remember how much I learned from her first book on Wordsworth, published as a volume in the Yale Studies in English and recently reprinted. I remember, in committee, department, and faculty meetings, that good mind, those perceptive comments, those searching questions, that passionate honesty. I remember when she was first considering editing Wordsworth's prose, and Dorothy Bethurum Loomis, who was then chairman of our department saying, "Today Jane went to the Morgan Library and got more done in a day than most people do in a year." I remember Jane's scorn of shoddy scholarship, and her witty comments on foolishness wherever she found it, as well as the generous and quick praise she gave to merit. I remember her pleasure in the city of London, in spite of her gloom about the future of England, and her wonderful stories about Grasmere. I remember, with special joy, the happiness of her marriage and her great love for her husband. I remember the courage and dignity — that endearing, indestructible pride and dignity — of her last days. Many will long remember and profit from her major achievement, in collaboration with W. J. B. Owen, the great three-volume edition of The Prose Works of William Wordsworth, printed only last year by the Clarendon Press of Oxford.

A rare combination of strength and sweetness, Jane was a fine scholar, a loved and demanding teacher, a loyal friend, an invaluable colleague, a gentle and complex person.

I turn now, for a moment, in a slightly different direction, to what I have long thought the heart's core — or perhaps the tutelary spirit, the presiding genius — of Jane Smyser: her love and respect for the English language. Her love for language was, I believe, as shaping for her as nature was for Wordsworth. It was not "The sounding cataract . . . the tall rock, / The mountain [or] the deep and gloomy wood" that "Haunted [her] like a passion." It was instead the mighty poetic line, from Marlowe to Yeats, and the piece of sinewy prose, wherever she found it. She built from this love her own lucid and pure style; she drew from it the unstinting attention and devotion she gave to both her teaching and her research. She made of it a legacy for us all.

Turner Construction Company

Building with Connecticut College

Turner is pleased to be building the new library for Connecticut College. We bring to the project over 70 years of experience in all types of building construction. In the past decade alone, we've completed educational and cultural facilities totaling nearly 7,000,000 sq. ft. across the country. We're happy to include the Connecticut College library among them.
